WILTON.

A number from here attended the anniversary services at Yarker on Sunday last, conducted by Rev. W. D. P. Wilson, Belleville.

The first ladies' Aid convention in the Napanee district will be held at Wilton Methodist church on Oct. 16th. A large attendance is expected. Luncheon will be served at noon by the Wilton ladies.

What's the matter with the Wilton "lmps?" They're all right. The girls journeyed to Stella on Tuesday and played the Stella girls a game ball at the fair. The score was 30-13 in favor of Wilton. On Thursday last they played the Bath team at Odessa fair, the score being 20-5 in favor of Wilton. The girls certainly deserve credit for the success they have had this season.

Nicholas Simmons has returned home from visiting his son in the States, and is now improving John Carr's house with a coat of paint.

Albert Reid had the misfortune to lose two fingers while cutting corn.

Stanley Peters has purchased a new Ford Sedan.

CAMDEN EAST.

The past few days have been very fine weather.

Quite a number from this vicinity attended Odessa Fair, which was a good one.

Mr. Lorne Williams has returned home, after spending three months in Cincinatti, Ohio, with his friend, Mr. T. Stockwell.

Mr. and Mrs. L. Hartman spent Sunday last in Odessa with their friends, Mr. and Mrs. James Boyce.

Mr. Geo. Frink of Maple Avenue attended the School Fair on Tuesday last.

Several Americans stopped at Mr. Sam Brien's on Monday night, motoring back to Arden on a fishing and hunting trip.

Mr. Leishman, of Kingston, motored here and spent Sunday last with his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. S. Brien.

Mr. John Lambert and wife, of Kingston, accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bisted motored here and called on his nephew, Mr. John Lambert, and family.

Mrs. Charles Bisted's sister, of Toronto, spent a few days recently with her.

The School Fair held in this village was a decided success. There was a large showing of good articles in every department, evidencing the interest the girls and boys are taking to make it a success. There was a large crowd and the day was fine for such an event.

Mrs. Bruce Saundercook is in Odessa, visiting her aunt, Mrs. J. Schamerhorn.

PETERBORO WINNERS OF EASTERN HONORS

The Peterboro C.G.E. team won the right to represent Eastern Ontario against Welland winners of the Western series, in the final round of the intermediate O.B.A. A play-off by virtue of a decisive win over Brockville at Napanee on Friday afternoon by the score of 15-1. The 1922 champions played like veterans and came out on top in a duel featured with grevious errors, hard hitting and good and bad pitching and which was finally halted in semi-darkness in the eighth inning.

Peterboro won the toss and elected to take the field, retiring Brockville without a run after the bases were loaded. Rose showed his calibre in the pinch, retiring the last two batters by the strike-out route. Harrie, the first man up for Peterboro, reached first on McLean's error; McCarney walked; Dugan was caught out but his batted ball struck him while hiking for first; Rose grounded to Reilly; Ross singled scoring Barrie and McCarney; Morrison singled, Jackson reached first on McLean's error, Ross and McPherson crossing the plate; Hall singled, but was later caught stealing.

In the 6th inning, three Peterboro men walked, the two-bagger by Ross being a triple by Oakley helping along the good work and forcing the retirement of Rowbotham from the mound, Singleton doing the relief work. After another error by McLean, and a base on balls, the third out was finally made by the third Brockville twirler.

Brockville made a real bid for the honors in the 7th when Oakley walked but was caught going to second. Ranger to Barrie. Reilly reached first when Dugan muffed. Hunter ditto on Ranger's wild peg, and Taber was hit by a pitched ball, filling the bases. Simon struck out, but Lane, the peppery Brockville catcher, came through with a terrific drive for a homer, tallying four runs and placing Brockville in the lead. Rose retired to short for a rest, Ranger was benched and Frost went to the mound, and the rally was nipped without further damage.

The winners clearly outplayed their rivals, the earned runs, outside of all the misplays, being enough to win the struggle by a safe margin. The Brockville twirlers were not given a great deal of support, Rowbotham and Lennox nightly tutted at 2's from "down East" failed to come through when hits meant runs. Lesperance starred for the losers, while Rose played brilliantly throughout.

THE BYE-ELECTION

HON. W. E. SINCLAIR VISITS THE LIBERAL ROOMS ON SATURDAY EVENING.

An enthusiastic meeting of Liberals was held in the Liberal Committee Rooms on Saturday evening to meet the Liberal leader Hon. W. E. Sinclair, member for South Ontario. Though the meeting was not advertised in any way, the rooms were crowded to capacity and a feeling pervaded the meeting that Mr. Carlton Woods, with the hearty support and hard work of his friends, would be elected on Oct. 22nd.

Mr. J. E. Madden acted as chairman and ably introduced the various speakers.

THE CANDIDATE SPEAKS.

In response to the call of the chairman, Carlton Woods gave a short but pithy speech and touched on many facts which were full of interest to his hearers. He made brief but pathetic reference to the sad event which rendered this election necessary and made eulogistic comment of the late Dr. Vrooman, of his splendid abilities which were lost to the riding, the province, and the country at large. He said there had always been a sort of unwritten law in regard to cases like this and that it was customary, in the premises, to concede the election to a man of the same political party as that of the deceased member. "Our Conservative friends in this riding evidently do not look at matters in this light, therefore I am, with your aid, influence, good organization and good hard work, going to do my utmost to win this election.

"I would call to your remembrance the fact that some years ago, on the death of T. G. Carscallen, M.P.P., I was the Liberal standard-bearer in this riding and when the Conservatives put up the late R. A. Fowler, in accordance with the unwritten law, to which I have referred, I waived my right to contest the election and allowed Mr. Fowler to take the seat by acclamation.

"The large majority given to Dr. Vrooman should have shown the Conservatives that their candidate would not likely run any better than he did before—that he was not wanted by the people. If we work earnestly and faithfully and are true to the Liberal principles to uphold all that is best for all the people we should emerge from this contest victorious."

HON. NELSON PARLIAMENT.

Hon. Nelson Parliament was greeted with applause when he arose to address the meeting. He began his most interesting address and at its conclusion. He said as a rule people did not take sufficient interest in by-elections, but in this election he was glad to see that the young men were coming forward actively and the fair sex of the women were giving exercise to their franchise and these factors would be largely helpful in the success of Carlton Woods' election on Oct. 22nd. You know that all beneficial measures, everything of advantage to the common people emanated from the Liberals.

A majority, even a large one, is good, but it is not good for any party to have such a large majority as the Conservatives have in the provincial parliament today; it is unwieldy.

"We in this part of the country have a wonderful heritage from our Liberal forefathers and we should put forth the same efforts for the upbuilding of the country that they did. Their example is worthy of our emulation. Your candidate, Carlton Woods, is worthy to take the place of Dr. Vrooman in the provincial parliament and you should give him your hearty support and your votes. Go into this election with determination and you will win."

THE LIBERAL LEADER.

Hon. W. E. Sinclair, Liberal leader for the province of Ontario, expressed the pleasure it gave him to be in Napanee and to meet such a large and representative body of the Liberals of Lennox. He sympathized with them in the grevious loss they had sustained in the demise of Dr. Vrooman. His passing was a distinct loss to the town, to the county of Lennox and Addington and to the whole province of Ontario. Now we are called into action to fill his place with another man.

He said that in this meeting he did not propose to treat of general topics pertaining to the political situation in the province as he expected to be back in Napanee in a few days, when these subjects would be discussed. "To-night," he said, "I am here to talk to you about the election of Mr. Carlton Woods.

"It has been said to me that this is a hard constituency for a Liberal to gain a victory in, but I would say to you, emphatically, that Lennox is not by any means a hopeless riding. The great necessity in the election of Carlton Woods is united effort and good, honest, hard work—what has been done before can be done again. Organizing and work is required to attain success, and I have ascertained that your organization is in good shape. Good results should follow and no doubt will. Everything will be in a position to have the vote in favor of your candidate. The Conservatives have in the provincial legislature 74 members and the Liberal opposition have only 14 men in the House. So it is very important that we add one more man now. A large majority is unwieldly and it is in the best interest of the people that the opposition should be strengthened. So I would say to you rally to the support of Mr. Carlton Woods on the 22nd. He is the right man to represent the people of Lennox. There will be a meeting in Napanee on the evening of the 18th instant, when I hope to meet you and the people of this riding and at that meeting I will have a message to deliver to you. I wish you unqualified success in your campaign."

OTHER SPEAKERS.

There were a number of other speakers who endorsed the sentiments of the speakers and the evening and gave helpful advice on many matters in connection with bringing the election to a successful issue. One speaker gave a very good point in advising as a means to success, was for each worker to endeavor to get a new voter, and he based the idea that the whole election depended on his individual vote and influence.

Chairman J. E. Madden conveyed the thanks of the meeting to Mr. Sinclair for his presence and for his excellent address.

The meeting was brought to a close in the usual patriotic manner.

Meetings in Carlton Woods' interest are to be held as follows: Switzerville, Tue. 9; Stella, Wed. 10; Roblin, Oct. 12; Bath, Oct. 13; Adolphustown, Oct. 15; Selby, Oct. 17; Napanee, Oct. 18; Odessa, Oct. 19th.

41ST. ANNUAL CONVENTION

LENNOX AND ADDINGTON RELIGIOUS EDUCATION COUNCIL.

The 41st Annual Convention of Lennox and Addington Religious Educational Council assembled in the beautiful and historic village of Newburgh on Tuesday, Oct. 2nd, in the Methodist Church, Mr. Alex MacGregor, the President, in the chair.

The morning session of the convention opened promptly at 10 o'clock, when Rev. Geo. Nickle, pastor of the Convention Church, conducted the devotional service, which proved very impressive and inspiring.

Mr. W. W. Adams, of Newburgh, on behalf of the church, welcomed the large gathering to Newburgh, and in a very pleasing way made all feel the warmth of fellowship and hospitality of the Newburgh people.

Mr. A. E. Robinson, 1st Vice-President of the County, in a few well chosen words thanked the people of Newburgh for their warm and enthusiastic welcome.

Mr. A. C. Baldwin gave the Secretary's report for the year and showed a very good year of a very commendable character and showed very careful and painstaking work throughout the year.

Dr. W. P. Fletcher, Rural Supt. O.R.E.C., then gave a very instructive and inspiring address on "The Teacher Before his Class." Dr. Fletcher said that before the teacher has a right to come before the class, he ought to have a real consciousness of the task before him, realizing and recognizing the bestowal of truth to that young life. The teacher must be fully alive to the responsibility that God speaks through him to the individuals of that class. When the teacher goes before his class with the consciousness of God in his life and with a real message he will not come before his class careless, but supremely alive to the task, and prepared to make touch, meeting the needs of the young life committed to his spiritual care. From the speaker's life and experience of the girls and boys. There must be the personal relationship with boys and girls in order that the teacher may supply the needs of the young life. The teacher speaks out of his head and his heart.

Dr. Fletcher explained the importance of knowing the Bible; the teacher's responsibility was to help the life; teacher's great task was not primarily to teach the Bible but to teach the young life given to his care. Jesus was given to us to love boys and girls, men and women. People were not created for the Bible, but the Bible was given for the people that the boy and the girl and man might develop the best possible life. The Bible is a book in which I can reach life and relate those matchless truths of God's great Father to the life. The Bible is to be studied that we may be better-fitted for all tasks of life and the teacher's task is to lead children to be earnest, honest and faithful, pure and kind, better men and women to do the great things that the Lord has done.

After Dr. Fletcher's address a very helpful Round Table Conference was conducted by Rev. W. R. Warwick on the practical advantage of graded lessons in Sunday School work.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The afternoon session was very suitably opened by Rev. W. R. Warwick of Morven, who conducted the devotional service.

The reports of the Department Superintendents were very interesting and showed splendid progress during the year. In every department of the work new standards have been reached since the last convention. Dr. Fletcher was very much pleased with the reports and remarked that he had not heard better reports anywhere and seldom as good.

The work continues to grow in volume and efficiency with each year's activities.

Rev. A. L. Blacklock, of Wilton, gave a splendid address on the subject "The Requirements of an Up-to-date School." Mr. Blacklock stressed the importance of proper equipment in up-to-date Sunday Schools, the necessity for organization among girls and boys, and the need of the social and play element as of supreme importance. The school must possess what the young life needs and then be able to meet those needs.

Mr. C. W. Neville, who has been the faithful treasurer for seven years, gave the Treasurer's Report.

The afternoon session closed with the President's address. Mr. A. MacGregor's address was inspiring and was received with intense interest by the Convention. Mr. MacGregor's address concluded with a strong appeal for more and better training in the home, the responsibility of parents, and the great need of family religion and the importance of the family altar. People must fail for the task, (1) Divine endowment; (2) Divine call and by (3) Divine surrender.

EVENING SESSION.

The evening session opened with a good hearty song service, led by the splendid choir of the Convention Church.

Rev. W. R. Tanton, of Trinity Church, Napanee, conducted the impressive devotional service in a very fitting manner.

Hon. Pres.—Mr. C. W. Neville, Kingston.

LARGE CROWDS IN ATTENDANCE.

The annual Fair of the Amherst Island Agricultural Society held at Stella on Tuesday, Sept. 25th, was one of the finest ever held.

The steamer Brockville, on her usual trip, brought crowds of people from Picton, Bath, Napanee, Kingston and other places. The visitors were pleased with the display in every department. The Roadster Horses was one of the finest and one of the largest exhibits seen at any Fall Fair of 1923.

The Horse Races, which were well contested, drew the attention of the crowds. All the horses entered were local horses and showed fine form.

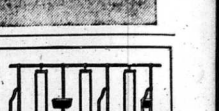
A Pure Hard Soap



Defies Rust!

There's one big point about "Toronto" Stable Equipment which makes me specially proud to sell it. It's the fact that the galvanizing thoroughly penetrates and completely coats both the inside and the outside of the steel tubing with pure zinc spelter. This "hot" process makes it absolutely rust-defying and proof against strong stable acids for the maximum period.

This is a mighty valuable feature. Let me explain some of the many others. Or get some of the interesting Toronto Literature.

Mr. A. MacGregor installed the officers for the year in a few well chosen words.

The report of the Resolution Committee was presented to the Convention by Rev. A. J. Wilson, of Napanee.

The following resolutions were unanimously adopted by the large audience present:

1. That the Lennox and Addington R.E.C. in convention assembled request the Provincial O.R.E.C. to memorialize the Provincial Government to pass legislation dealing with and regulating the sale of flavoring extracts of alcoholic contents.

2. That this convention request the O.R.E.C. to take into consideration how temperance can be scientifically temperance can be brought before the Sunday Schools of the County.

3. That we request the O.R.E.C. to make a change in the date of "Go to Sunday School Sunday," which at present time is too close proximity to Mother's Day and Patriotic Sunday.

4. 6. That the convention desires to recognize with gratitude the valuable and efficient services of Mr. C. W. Neville, who has served the County so faithfully during seventeen years in the capacity of Secretary-Treasurer.

Dr. W. J. Fletcher gave the closing address, which was stirring, inspiring and heart searching. Those who were privileged to hear Dr. Fletcher in his passionate appeal for the religious education of the boys and girls will not soon forget his burning words, which kindled the heart of everyone present.

Next year the Convention will meet at Odessa.

Ontario Superannuation Fund.

Ontario's superannuation fund for public servants has increased from $268,000 to $563,000 last year, according to the second annual report. The province contributed $230,000 to the fund during the year, and the employees $197,000. The latter paying varying proportions on their salaries. The sum of $169,000 was paid out last year. During the year 27 employes reached the age of 70, of whom 13 were superannuated, leaving 29 others, who were already past that age. The cost of administering the fund last year was $2,000.

A Record.

Family of thirteen, which is believed to be a record for United States settlers, was brought across the border at North Portal, by W. J. Roberts, of Oake, N.D. Occupying a car and a large trailer, containing their household goods, were Mr. Roberts himself, his wife, eight sons, two daughters and a nephew, all children, en route to Edmonton district, where he hopes to file on a homestead. Two of the children are twins.

TOWERS OF SILENCE.

The Bombay Parsees are petitioning the corporation to grant them a site where an electric crematorium may be constructed to supplant the present "Towers of Silence."

As followers of Zoroaster, the Parsees do not believe in burning the dead. They are taken in solemn procession to the Towers, where the sacred fire is kept burning, and placed in positions where they remain until the vultures destroy them. The bones are then interred in the Towers with religious ceremony.

The "Towers of Silence" on Malabar Point at Bombay make a deep impression upon the Westerner. They rise between great stretches of the water, like a place from which one mounts to Heaven, and, indeed, that is the idea which the Parsees cherish.

Gaunt trees of considerable height surround the cemetery, and fearful looking vultures, birds of enormous size, hang from their branches. The effect upon the Westerner is not good, and he is prone to forget the idea in the gruesome surroundings which it is commemorated. But the idea itself is stimulating, and marks a deep contrast between Western and Eastern minds.

For the "Towers of Silence" represent the journeying of the soul from the fret and turmoil of earthly life towards the silence and joy of the Eternal.

On Cuffe Parade, the fashionable promenade of Bombay which faces Malabar Point from the East, one sees in the rich evening hour crowds of gaily dressed Parsees flittering about like parti-colored butterflies enjoying the hues of sky and sea. The short spell between heat and evening shade is spent perambulating the promenade or squatting upon its stones in multi-colored groups.

Across the bay lies Malabar Point, and as the shades of evening deepen lots of light suddenly break out and turn the long promontory into a blue mass studded with points of brightness.

But within this place of beauty the "Towers of Silence" sleep in grim repose, and above watch the vultures with increasing vigilance. The contrast between the splash of life and the calm of death could not be given a more striking setting. One is instinctively drawn towards the silence that awaits one at the last.

The habit of seeking the calm which silence brings might well be adopted by many Westerners. For in silence and the withdrawal from fret it ensures, we shall gain refreshment and new strength.

"GOLDEN DOG."

Famous Stone Now Over Doorway of Quebec Post Office.

The Golden Dog, the central figure in Canadian fiction centering about old Quebec, has been given a place of honor in the post office of that ancient city. The stone now rests over the main doorway, and the canine gnaws his bone under the full protection of the Federal Government.

The origin of the Golden Dog is obscure. The facts relative to it, which are vouched for, claim that it adorned the doorway of an independent merchant who tried to compete with the Company of One Hundred Associates, which had been given a powerful control of the Canadian fur trade by the French king in 1685.

The inuependent merchant was cramped and tire oned by the combine, but his honest dealings and high standing in the community told in his favor, and slowly his wealth increased as did the hatred of the chartered company. The stone appears to have been brought from France, but the inscription was added to it in Quebec about the year 1730. The inscription reads:

I am a dog that knaws a bone,
I crouch and knaw it all alone,
A time will come, which is not yet,
When I'll bite him by whom I'm bit.

This was undoubtedly a clever shot from the merchant at Bigot, the corrupt representative of the French king, but authentic history is silent about the real facts of the old merchant's revenge.

A Belgian Choice.

When the stamp collectors of Great Britain met in congress at the Hotel Cecil, M. Manky, of Belgium, delivered an address. And this is how he began:

"I am addressing you in the beautiful language of Shakespeare, Lloyd George and Horatio Bottomley."

He went on to say that the English-speaking nations collected stamps in a more scientific manner than did the Belgians.

Expression Is Dean Swift's.

In Swift's "Gulliver's Travels" (Voyage to Brobdingnag) is this sentence: "And therefore my own opinion that whoever could make two ears of corn or two blades of grass grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before would deserve better of mankind and do more essential service to his country than the whole race of politicians put together."

Out of 11 open championships offered, Alberta butter took 8. In the Calgary exhibition six provinces competed, in three others four provinces competed, and in two others three provinces competed.

British Columbia has reached the peak of the biggest tourist season in her history, and it is estimated that as a result of the enormous travel and the expenditure of transients while in the province this summer, will be worth at least $30,000,000. The opening of the Banff-Windermere motor highway through Canada's rock garden was largely responsible for this increase in tourist traffic through the Pacific province.

Gold producers in the Province of Ontario during the first six months of 1923 report production of 384,446 ounces gold and 65,444 ounces silver, of a total value of $7,244,061 shipped by the 9 Porcupine producers and from the Kirkland Lake producers 69,691 ounces gold and 6,515 ounces silver, of a total value of $1,402,873, or from the two camps a total value of $8,646,964.

The Canadian Pacific Railway will contribute $25,000 for the relief of the sufferers in Japan and have also decided that supplies of Canadian wood-stuffs and clothing which are purchased with money donated for relief work, will be transported free over the Company's rail and steamship lines. President E. W. Beatty made this announcement while making a tour over the Company's lines in the West with a party of directors, and it is understood had been taken because of the reports of the intense hardships due to the disaster, and notwithstanding the fact that the Company had lost heavily by the catastrophe.

The following editorial recently appeared in the Windsor "Border Cities Star": A recent cargo of silk, en route from China to New York, was shipped via Vancouver and the Canadian Pacific Railroad and crossed the St. Lawrence to Ogdensburg, New York, instead of being sent across the United States from San Francisco. The incident offers something for Canadians to think about.

It proves what a splendid service the Canadian Pacific offers in its rail and steamship lines. In a country like Canada, transportation is all essential, and the way the Canadian Pacific has carried on, in spite of the business difficulties which began with the war and are not yet smoothed out, is a credit to the nation which conceived it.

Again, the incident calls attention to Canada's splendid gateway to the East. Although China is in a somewhat political condition just now, the huge Oriental nation offers wonderful trade chances in the future. No nation is better placed for getting its share of this business than Canada.

Corn From Cockles.

When fish is too plentiful and prices low tons of herring or mackerel are dumped on the beach and hauled away by farmers to manure their land.

The odor is dreadful, but the result, so far as crops are concerned, is excellent.

Shellfish make the best manure. Of late limpets have been doing much harm to the oyster beds on the East Coast of England. The Whitstable Oyster Company have been clearing their beds of these pests, and have secured over eight thousand bags weighing some four hundred tons.

All these have been put on the land, and extraordinary crops of corn and roots have resulted.

Cockles, mussels, or any other shell fish are equally valuable as manure, for the shells are good fertiliser as well as the fish themselves.

In the United States a species of stickleback is netted out from rivers by the ton and used upon the land.

Queen Mary's Jewels.

Queen Mary's jewels have been offered to the Board of Trustees for the National Galleries of Scotland as the body in charge of the two National Institutions—the Scottish National Portrait and the National Museum of Antiquities—thought most suited for their public exhibition. That Board has now accepted them, and, when it has been decided in which of these collections they are to be included, they will be placed on public view.

British Cultivated Land.

Cultivated land in England and Wales is now about the same as the pre-war area, but permanent pastures are less extensive. The cultivated land has been decreasing since 1918, when it amounted to 12,799,000 acres. It now amounts to 11,511,000 acres, compared with 11,535,000 acres in 1912. Permanent pastures now occupy 14,715,000 acres, compared with 14,589,000 acres in 1918 and with 15,529,000 acres in 1912.

SECRET OF OLD OAK CHEST.

Woman Claims Estates In Kent and Yorkshire.

A woman's claim to large estates in Dartford, Crayford and other parts of Kent and at Pickering, in Yorkshire, is expected to be decided shortly.

Miss Ashton, of Burlington road, London, the claimant, thinks she is about to establish her case, and has been asked to send certain evidence to the court which deals with the claims of poor persons.

She bases her case on documents found in an old oak chest, which was unearthed during the rebuilding of a house in Kent, formerly occupied by her great grandfather.

"My people," she says, "trace their descent as far back as the Conquest; but the claim comes direct from William Marshall, Earl of Pembroke, a kinsman of King John, and favorite of the Crown."

To Marshall were given lands, patronage, and entailed estates, which were held by the family for many years.

"My great-grandfather, continued Miss Ashton, "was the originator of the claim as we know it. Charles Marshall set to work in 1826, and we have pursued it ever since."

Referring to the discovery of the oak chest, Miss Ashton said, "It came to us as a great revelation, and the contents indicated much about the property. In there the Dartford High-street and adjoining parts in several directions are named."

Asked why the matter had been left to go so long without formal claim, Miss Ashton said: "The Marshalls of the direct line left England; some going to America, but the elder representatives to France, where they settled for many years, and did not return till family history had become almost forgotten and records gone astray."

Commons and Camping.

Many people consider themselves on sure ground when wandering over a breezy heather-clad common. There are about 1,750,000 acres of such land in England and Wales, and fights to save it from wrongful enclosure are being waged incessantly by the Commons and Footpaths Preservation Society.

There is a general impression that on commons, at all events, holiday-makers may safely pitch their tents or caravans and camp. This is not the case. A common, lawyers tell us, is the private property of the Lord of the Manor or some other owner. It is termed a common because certain persons known as commoners are entitled to exercise rights of common over it.

They may, perhaps, be able to turn animals to graze upon the land, or they may have the right to cut gorse or heather, bracken or undergrowth, for fuel or litter.

It is the existence of these rights that makes the land a common. They operate to prevent the lawful enclosure of the land, and, so long as they exist, pedestrians who commit no wilful or assessable damage are fairly safe. But the camper may be summarily ejected.

The gipsy or vagrant has often brought all campers into ill-repute, and the genuine and harmless pleasure-seeker suffers from the reputation of those who are credited with an uncanny power of discovering the position of unguarded hen-roosts. Accordingly, it is wise before camping on a common in England to seek permission from the representative of the Lord of the Manor, if he can be found.

Was It Dick Whittington?

In the wall of the nave of Old Cleeve church, Somerset, England, is a recess surmounted by a boldly molded ogee arch, finished off with a face bearing a somewhat satanic expression, and within the recess is the recumbent effigy of a civilian of the fifteenth century. This has not been identified, and the very curious carving of a cat, on which the feet of the effigy rests, has greatly piqued. One paw of the cat rests upon a mouse and the cat itself is seen to be looking up as though seeking its master's approval. It is a somewhat singular circumstance that this group is contemporary, or nearly so, with Sir Richard Whittington.

DISCOVERER OF CANADA

JACQUES CARTIER A NATIVE OF BRITTANY.

Sailed From St. Malo With Two Small Vessels of 60 Tons Each and 61 Companions—Greatly Impressed With Richness and Fertility of the Land.

Jacques Cartier, the discoverer of Canada, was a native and resident of the town of St. Malo, a port of Brittany, the part of France that extends farthest to the west into the sea. St. Malo is due south of the Channel Islands, belonging to Great Britain.

At St. Malo Cartier was born towards the close of the fifteenth century. As a youth he went to sea and became one of the noted seamen of a district noted then as now for its skilled and hardy sailors. Proof of this is that he earned the rank of Master Pilot.

Already something was known in France of the New World beyond the Atlantic, and the King authorized an expedition of discovery and exploration. Cartier was given command.

On April 20, 1534 he sailed from St. Malo with two small vessels of about 60 tons each, carrying 61 persons all told. On May 27 he reached the Strait of Belle Isle, and spent a month exploring the strait and the Newfoundland coast. He then passed into the Gulf of St. Lawrence, and came upon the Magdalen Islands, now part of the Province of Quebec.

The first islands seen were what are now known as the Bird Rocks. Five leagues to the west was another island, where water and fuel wood were procured.

And now let the discovery of the island that the French called St. Jean, now Prince Edward Island, be told in the words of the Hon. A. B. Warburton, D.C.L., K.C., ex-Premier of Prince Edward Island, and now a member of the Bench.

During June 27 and the following day, Cartier sailed along the islands (Magdalen Islands), passing several till he reached a very high pointed one, which he called Alleazy.

On June 29 the wind changed to the southwest and they ran until Tuesday the 30th at sunrise. At sunset the previous day, they saw land like two islands which lay to the west-south-west nine or ten leagues. Bogster assumes that he arrived on the night of 28th June near southwest Cape.

Cartier's Landfall has been the subject of much controversy. This question, in the writers' opinion, has been effectually disposed of by the exertions of Mr. W. F. Thomson, ex-Charlottetown. To settle it, Mr. Thomson, some years ago, sailed in a schooner in the closing days of June, from the Magdalen to P. E. Island, taking as nearly as possible the courses taken by Cartier, since Cartier, he found in the estimate that appeared like two small islands on nearer approach they were seen to be in fact, Cathcart's Point and Cape Schoviter, on the north shore of the island, about four or five miles west of East Point. This would seem to dispose of the question of Cartier's landfall. The distance sailed from these two points (about 40 leagues) fits in with Cartier's narrative. Mr. Bogster adopts these two capes as the land-fall, and this writer has no hesitation in taking the same view.

Landing in his boats at several places, Cartier was greatly impressed with the richness and fertility of the land. He describes the country as a beautiful one, speaks of its low level land as:—The fairest that it may be possible to see and full of goodly trees and meadows.

The explorers landed at several places, among others at a river, which they named the River of Boats, a fine stream where they saw the boats of savages crossing the stream. This may be identified with Richmond Bay and the entrance to the Narrows.

The wind blowing in from the sea, Cartier made to the northeast, until next day at sunrise, when as it became foggy and stormy, he struck sail until 10 o'clock, when they saw Cape Orleans, now Kildare Cape, and further to the north another cape which he named Cape Savage, clearly the North Cape. Rounding this cape, he noticed the long and dangerous reef. This day (1st July) he sailed nine or ten leagues up the coast towards the West Cape, thinking to find a harbor, which he failed to do, as the land was low.

As he sailed up the coast, the land apparently closed in on both sides, whence he concluded he was in a large bay. On July 2nd he saw land to the north which held with that already skirted, which satisfied him that it was a large bay. He was at the western entrance to the Straits of Northumberland, but failed to see it. He had sailed along the whole north shore of P. E. Island, and rounding the North Cape, had sailed up nine or ten leagues along the western shore, without knowing it to be an island.

We first hear of this Island of St. John (for there were others) when the Basques seized one of Champlain's vessels many years later and took it to a port they had fortified on the island for their own use.

St. John the Baptist seems to have caused much of the confusion that has long existed regarding the early history of P. E. Island. His feast is a favorite name, and it is found in many places, hence the confusion. There were Cabot's Island of St. John, off the east coast of Cape Breton; Gomez's Island of St. John, meaning Cape Breton itself. On Sebastin Cabot's map the Magdalens are called St. John; there are St. John's, Newfoundland; St. John, New Brunswick the River St. John and Cartier's discovery would certainly have conferred upon France the first claim to the ownership of the island, but it was long overlooked, or probably the French were too much engrossed with affairs at home, where they had plenty of troubles, to give thought to their North American possessions.

Pennies as Pledges.

In its original form the penny was not a coin, but a token or pledge. Its derivation comes from the same source as that from which we get the word "pawn," and also such words as "panel," "pane," "counterpane," and "panicle."

The readiest pledge to leave in pawn was cloth, hence the Latin "pannus" a piece of cloth. The original panel was a piece of cloth, or patch, and from this we get the word "pane" as applied to a pane of glass, and also the word "penny," its literal meaning being a piece of cloth, and hence a coin. Originally the word was spelt "peny."

The word shilling really means a division of money into small parts, and is obtained in a word meaning "to divide." Thus, in the first place, there was not a coin called a shilling—a division of money having been made up in small form.

Sterling, as applied to money, is derived from the Easterlings, which had an important house in England. As their land lay to the east of England, Englishmen called them "Easterlings," and the gold they paid in the course of trade became known as "Easterling money," subsequently the expression became sterling.

Good Old Time "Ads."

No one denies that the modern advertisement man is a genius in the way he extols the merits of his wares, but the "ad." man of 1657 was pretty good. Here is one he drew himself in a newspaper of that date:

"The drink called coffe is a very wholesome and physical drink, dissolving many excellent virtues, closes the orifice of the stomach, fortifies the heath, helpeth digestion, quickeneth the spirit, maketh the heart gladsome; is good against eye sore, coughs, cr.cmds, rhumes, consumption, headaches, dropsie, gout, scurvy, king's evil, and many others."

Some Rights of Royalty.

King George has the right by statute to the sturgeon and whale caught on the coast of his kingdom. The tail is to go to the Queen, that her wardrobe may be trimmed with whale bone. Also, he has a right entitled to every sturgeon brought to land in the United Kingdom, and should previous, two every year, from divers persons, of the value of fifty-three shillings, two white bucks and two white does, a cygnet, or young bird of cygnets, a bonnet, a pound of cummin seed, a horse and a mare, a pair of scarlet hose, and a silver needle from his tailor.

"Tell me, pretty maiden, are there any more at home like you?"

So runs the perennial song of the Telephone Company. Its force of operators must be constantly recruited, for Dan Cupid is forever turing hundreds from the switchboard to the home switchboard.

The schools for operators which are a part of the telephone system in every good sized city, careful training is given student operators. After a thorough physical examination, the girls are drilled in enunciation and voice production, and schooled in the system of numbering employed at the switchboard. Then at a practice switchboard they get a complete training in selecting and connecting the numbers asked for by their instructors who act the part of calling subscribers. Conditions at an actual switchboard are reproduced as exactly as possible and when the training is complete, the student is assigned to the less busy positions in the central office where her work as a beginner is under careful supervision until efficiency is assured.

Garrett—Denison.

On Tuesday, Oct. 2nd, the home of Mr. and Mrs. D. R. Denison, Selby, was a bower of blossoms and foliage, it being the eventful solemnizing of the marriage of their daughter, Verna Alma, to Mr. Alex B. Garrett, only son of Mr. and Mrs. John Barnum, Toronto. The bride was accompanied to the drawing room by her father, while Miss Carmaleta Frisken presided at the piano. Rev. T. H. P. Anderson, officiating minister, tied the nuptial knot under an arch of evergreens and white asters. The bride was daintily gowned in white flat Crepe with Grecian sleeves and collar of Maltese lace. She wore the conventional veil and flowers and carried a shower of Ophelia roses and Lily of the Valley. After the ceremony a beautiful wedding dinner was served to about forty invited guests. The toast to the bride was proposed by Dr. A. G. Tummon. In responding the groom thanked the friends for their kindness and good wishes and also invited one and all to visit them in their Toronto home. The bride received many handsome and useful gifts, testifying to her popularity and the groom, who is on the Head Office Staff of the Canadian Press Association, was presented, on the eve of his marriage, with an address and a beautiful mantel clock as a mark of esteem by his associates in office. Amid a shower of confetti the happy couple left for a honeymoon in Ottawa, New York and other eastern cities. The bride travelled in a suit of brown broadcloth with sable trimmings. After November 1st Mr. and Mrs. Garrett will be at home at their residence, 6 Wyndham St., Toronto.

The Late R. G. Wright.

Reuben G. Wright, one of Napanee's oldest and most highly respected citizens, passed away on Wednesday night, if last week, in his 83rd year. Many years ago he was in the hardware business with the firm of Boyle & Wright, which business is now carried on by Messrs. Boyle & Son. He was also with the Gilbard Furniture Co., and for the last number of years has represented the Gurney Co., of Toronto. St. Mary Magdalene's church, Napanee, has been one of its most staunch supporters in the death of Mr. Wright. Mr. Wright was the surviving member of the committee in charge of the building of the present church, of which the 50th anniversary was celebrated in July. He was also lay delegate to the Synod from the church for a long number of years. He leaves a family of one son, Mr. Lawrence Wright, Assiniboya, Sask., Mrs. Reeve, Ottawa and Miss Leila Wright at home. The funeral took place from his late residence on Monday. Services were held in St. Mary Magdalene's Church and interment at Riverside.

Mrs. J. W. Maines.

Esther G. Rose, daughter of Wm. and Ann Rose, was born at Selby, Ontario, July 26th, 1846, and died at the home of her son, E. L. Maines, in Grandview, Wash., September 4th, 1923, aged 77 years, 1 month and 9 days. On January 13th, 1863, she was married to John W. Maines, of Selby, with whom she spent over sixty years of wedded life. Five children were born of this marriage, only two of whom survive—E. L. Maines of Grandview and Mrs. E. L. Harbin, of Seattle. She is also survived by a brother, Mr. Alex Rose, of Napanee. Until about eighteen years ago she had lived within a short distance of her birthplace, and shortly after this came to Sunnyside, where with her husband she lived until about two years ago when failing health made it imperative that they give up their own home, and they went to live with their daughter, spending part of the time with their son at Grandview. Less than two weeks before her death she came to Grandview, and within ten days was stricken with heart trouble, and after suffering a slight stroke in a few days passed peacefully away. Mrs. Maines has been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church since she was 12 years of age and has always taken an active part. Her sunny, cheerful disposition won for her a host of friends, who will mourn her loss at this time.—Grandview Herald, Grandview, Wash.

"It has been a year now since Tanlac helped back to good health and I have never had a sick day since," is the high tribute paid the famous treatment, recently, by Mrs. Corine Leblanc, highly esteemed resident of 126 Stirling Ave., Ontario.

Grace Church Rally Services.

Not since Hanley and Fisher left and the Reception Service in May last, have such crowds of people flocked to Grace Church, as came last Sunday to the Rally Services. Rev. S. T. Bartlett gave two special services and old friends from far and near gathered to greet him. Nearly hundred and forty-eight where the Secretary's figures for attendance of Sunday School purposes, apart from numbers of scholars scattered through the congregation. Most noteworthy was the grouping of the adult classes. They nearly filled the galleries, while the centre of the auditorium was filled by the Primary and Intermediate and Young People's classes. Possibly the most remarkable showing was made by the "Helping Hand Bible Class," which was organized only a few months ago, with Garfield Sills as President, Mr. Stalker as Teacher and Fred J. Vandeline as Secretary. They reported 48 present and 47 on the roll. The delivery of 8 o'clock Morningrams by 20 of our brightest boys, on bicycles, did much to make the day a success. The evening service provided a delightful and inspiring hour, by choir and orchestra and Mrs. Bradley's closing number, "My World," brought to a close a very happy term as choir leader and soloist. The ease and graciousness was added to her finely trained voice and ability as leader have endeared her to an enlarging circles of admirers and friends, as she sails to revisit her English home this week, she bears with her a multitude of good wishes and a beautiful token of the esteem of her choir.

A LETTER FROM JAPAN

MISS OLIVE HAMBLY WRITES AN INTERESTING LETTER.

Najiri Lake,
Sept. 2nd, 1923.

My Dear People :—

This has been one of the greatest days in the history of this old world.

Every person belonging to our Mission is safe. Miss Robertson went to Tokio to prepare for Miss Hamilton and the other people, but to her great joy, yet sorrow, she was one of the fortunate ones; one who has been able to help those who are less fortunate.

Yokohama is completely out of existence from tidal wave and fire and earthquake. The bridge between Tokio and Yokohama has burned. Those who are left are starving, no means of providing food except aeroplane and they are few; Tokio was all destroyed except Aryabee, where I lived for a year. I mean the district. The general board property and that district and the S. Methodist property which lies near Aryabee. Mr. and Mrs. Cragg were down to see her son away to Canada on the "Australia." No word has been received as yet. Two went from our Mission. Mr. Outerbridge is one, have undertaken to walk to Yokohama to see if he can locate them. This might mean 50, 75 or 100 miles.

Kobo was badly damaged. No sweets have been sold in Kobe for a fortnight. One of this is official. There are no lights, no food, no water and no communication to either of those places. Fofu and Shizuoka where S. lives are included. Gun boats are taking water from Kobe a day and a half away. Autos are rushing forth with cannot be leased. The refugees are coming fused. Sending food over by the thousands. One man who returned was asked about the number of deaths. He replied, I am sure say 1,000,000, but I would to say from what I saw. The Lord is the only one who can say.

Two of our Canadian men who spent four years in France said "The fire here was awful" and can compare. I know nothing about the war, but these men bore the scars of war."

Of three were in our Nopiri one and only felt the shock. I more like being sea sick than before. We felt 400 shocks after that, but they were mild in Karuizawa, where I spent my first summer was badly cracked, no damage done. Missies can be seen lying flat from Karuizawa to Tokio, which is a few hour trip by train.

Yesterday K. left for Shizuoka with all the food she could carry. We hope the train will take her all the way, but if it does not she will have to walk. No person can find out the conditions there. I am just waiting for word. Lois is in the same state but she will leave tonight to investigate conditions.

As we have two little orphanage girls I am responsible for them until a place can be provided. No women are allowed to enter the damaged territory and there is no railway time table. Trains travel at all hours and are stacked like a load of hay with people going to Tokio to find their friends and with refugees coming away.

I cannot tell you about the terrible pictures presented to me, one who has been able to help those who are less fortunate. Words will not tell, cannot tell, never will tell. I can understand now why V. and Karl would not talk about the war.

I did not write before because it could not get to Kobe and I did not know anything until last night, Sept. 4th. I could not write because Tokio was cut off. I could not send a wireless because Tokio could receive but could not reply. Dr. Kenzie has put forth every effort to get a message through telling that all the W. M. S. and General Board people were safe, except Mr. Cragg (we do not know, and have not been notified.)

We really feel that our Mission has been wonderfully well protected and cared for and we have much to be thankful for, not only now but all the time.

Now a word from one who is on the spot. From the looks of things at the present I feel certain that there will be a very great shortage of food before next spring. We do not know whether the money we have in the banks will be any good. Just because Yokohama and Tokio were headquarters for all and the banks are flat. Tokio to Yokohama cheques

The Japanese Government is responsible in my opinion, but if money is asked for please do not forget to give. Every dollar sent will help to bring some poor soul through the cold winter.

This is a very crude, rambly letter, but I am unable to collect my thoughts so as to be able to write real sense. If you have a chance to go to the camp, give Lois a hug before winter. It will be greatly needed. We have all been asked to live on as little as possible so as to make the supply hold out until food can come from home.

We are so happy and thankful that we have been spared and hope to be able to help those who have been so unfortunate. I am going to Fukui to-morrow with my two adopted girls for autime.

YOUR LOVING AND THANKFUL CHILD.

MISSIONARY TELLS OF ESKIMOS' FONDNESS FOR HARRY LAUDER.

Having to pay $80 a ton for coal for winter which generally lasts 11 months of the year, and living for months on reindeer, caribou and seal, and seeing only a few white men during the year, were some of the experiences of Rev. W. H. D. Hoare and Mrs. Hoare, of Ottawa, Anglican missionaries to the Eskimos at Herschel Island in the Arctic Ocean for the last three years. Mr. and Mrs. Hoare and two children arrived in Ottawa on Monday morning, October 1st, after having been on their way home since May 2. They travelled by dog train, canoe, steamboat and by train. The whole family are in excellent health, and the two children, Billy-boy, aged two years, and Sheila, aged 4 months, are especially thriving. Mr. Hoare said that he came out of the Arctic as it was practically impossible to get proper food for his children. He had been a missionary among the Eskimos for 10 years, and his last trip there was three years ago when he brought his bride, formerly Miss Catherine Cowan, daughter of Mrs. David Manchester, 1140 Somerset street, Ottawa, and also a sister of Ensign George Cowan, of the Salvation Army, who has recently returned to Ottawa from India.

CONVERTING ESKIMOS.

That the 400 Eskimos of Herschel Island were all converted to the Anglican denomination was told by Mr. Hoare, who recounted many interesting experiences of the people of the far North. Trading among the natives was done by barter, but when the trading ships came in the natives exchanged their furs for merchandise, rice, flour, tea, and dried vegetables. Coal was especially expensive. Mr. Hoare having had to pay as much as $80 a ton for it. "We were able to afford only five tons last year," he said. The natives bought coal in 100-lb. lots, giving their fur in exchange. There is no wood on Herschel Island and King Winter generally stayed about 11 months, though this year there were two months of summer.

The Eskimos were very fond of music, many of them possessing music. Harry Lauder was a great favorite, the natives having a liking for the great Scotch comedian. Music was their chief recreation. Outside of that there were dog races at Christmas. There was also much sleighing. They had found dancing to their liking, the country hoe-downs being the most popular. They were introduced years ago by the Mounted Police, surveyors, and sailors of the whaling ships.

Mr. Hoare said that the only vegetation on Herschel Island was grass and moss. There was a variety of flowers but no produce grown. The frost never came out of the ground. In the summer it went down in the ground about eighteen inches, but it came up in the autumn. A healthy man could live on Herschel Island, but the climate was trying.

GETTING HEALTHIER.

The Eskimos were getting healthier, after fighting sickness and disease for years. Mr. Hoare said that there was no divorce among the people. They were all Christians. "It is not known," The Eskimos were a happy people. They had no laws. They didn't know anything about the high cost of living, and they had all the luxuries they cared about.

The Rev. Hoare and Mrs. Hoare referred to in this article were both Sunday school pupils twenty years ago in Rev. Dr. Gwynne Kerman's Church, St. Matthias, Ottawa and Catherine also sang in the choir. She took privately lessons in the Holy Scriptures from Mrs. Jemmett, the widow of Rev. George Jemmett, in whose house the church was formed. They were grand-parents of the two Napanee Jemmett boys, one of whom is now a Professor in Queen's College, Kingston.

SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTIONS NAPANEE-STRATFORD

"This is the way I may do it when I get back home" is the purpose aimed at by Sunday School Teachers by the Ontario Religious Education Council at the two Provincial Conventions to be held at Napanee, October 23-25 and Stratford Oct. 30 to Nov. 1st this year.

The Convention at Napanee will be the Quinte administrative section, when the General Board of Management will meet in Annual Session receiving reports, electing officers and outlining future policies and plans. In view of the discussion concerning Church Union this year's business meeting will be specialy pertinent.

The faculty and speakers this year will be purely Canadian and comprise the very best leaders and experts in every department of Religious Education in the Dominion.

Special emphasis is to be placed on "Worship Services," Adult Work, Parent responsibility and Missions, with the usual Denominational and Departmental Sessions and Conferences.

The Provincial Secretaries of the Denominational Sunday School Boards; Dr. P. R. Hayward, General Secretary Religious Education Council of Canada; Prof. F. W. Kerr, Manitoba College; Miss Mary Allison, late Secretary of Religious Training Maritime Provinces; Mrs. Palmer G. Burgess, Children's Division Supt. Quebec, and Mrs. J. C. Eaton and Mrs. W. P. Fletcher, of Toronto, along with others will take part in the programme.

The programme provides for four separate sessions of the various departments each evening. Sunday School workers will every where have the opportunity of hearing their own special problems treated as well as engaging in informal discussion.

Perhaps the most interesting and far-reaching part of the program will be the Missionary addresses given and conferences led by Dr. Dan Norman, 20 years a Missionary, as well as advisor to government officials in Japan, who has a message of particular interest at the moment when the terrible situation in Japan is uppermost in people's minds.

Professor Yohan Masih, Vice Principal of Indore College, India, a native Christian, second generation, his father and grandfather both being converts, and who is visiting Canada in the interests of the Church's work in India, will bring to the delegates a first hand message that will be both an education and inspiration.

Napanee is preparing to entertain 400 and Stratford 600 delegates and all who plan to be attending should register early in order to avoid disappointment.

A Good Meeting.

The Women's Liberal Association had a most successful meeting Saturday afternoon, when the Neely Committee Room was filled to capacity. Mrs. F. F. Miller, the President, gave a short speech after which she introduced the speakers—Mr. Woods, the candidate, the Honorable Nelson Parliament and A. W. E. Sinclair, the Liberal Leader. Each gave an interesting address, Mr. Sinclair adding many helpful suggestions as to the coming campaign. The Rooms will be open each Saturday afternoon and evening.

If you want results use The Express "Want Column." It is a good advertising medium.

Mr. Fred Hosey met with an accident returning from Shannonville on Monday evening. In passing another car he hit a culvert and was thrown through the windshield, cutting his face badly. His wife and daughter, who were with him, escaped unhurt.

At H. W. KELLY'S Grocery you can get ripe tomatoes, new cabbage, good old cheese, Purity flour and Reindeer flour, fresh Creamery butter every day, also 2 lbs. prunes for 25c., 2 cans corn 25c., new Cheese 23c., 2 lbs. Seedless Raisins 35c. The best Coffee, pure. Try it, we will grind it while you wait. We pay the highest price for eggs.

Campbell House Corner.

Anniversary services will be held at Grace Church on Sunday, Oct. 28th, when the Rev. W. W. Fallis, D.D., of Toronto, Book Steward of the Methodist Church, will be the preacher, and Percy Anglin will be the special soloist. On the week night Major Hanley will give his great Chautauqua address on "Making a Masterpiece," and Mr. Fred Fisher will sing. It is anticipated that these gatherings will tax to the utmost the capacity of the church.

Two very pretty girls met on the street, and kissed each other rapturously. Two young men watched this meeting. "There's another of those things that are so unfair," said one.

"What is that?" said his friend.

He pointed to the scene: "Women doing men's work."

CLUNG TO TWO MASTS

Schooner Goes Down in Hurricane Off Nova Scotia.

Captain and Seaman Perish — Six Others Lashed Themselves to the Masthead and Resisted Storm and Hunger Until They Were Rescued By the Schodack.

NEW YORK, Oct. 8.—Clinging for 36 hours to two masts, all that remained of the schooner Governor Parr, six men from the crew won a grim battle against death in a coast storm, they told friends when they arrived Saturday on the freighter Schodack. The Governor Parr, bound from Ingramport, N.S., to Buenos Ayres, went down in a hurricane off Nova Scotia last Tuesday. Captain Angus Comanda and Vincent Bigh, a seaman, perished.

The others six climbed to the mast-head, lashed themselves secure, and resisted alternate hunger and thirst until they were rescued by the Schodack Wednesday night. A cat and dog, the vessel's mascots, also were saved.

All suffered severely from the ordeal, a few had not recovered on arrival here. William Edward Corbin, James Henderson, Morgan Trim, Percy Cleveland, sailors; Emanuel Richards cook, and Albert Smith, mate, were taken to the Sailors' Institute.

THE PRINCE'S VISIT

Chicago, Sept. 29.—That the real motive behind the American visit of the Prince of Wales is to encourage immigration from England to Canada, thus relieving the old country of her surplus population while increasing the stock of Anglo-Saxon blood on the American continent, is the surmise advanced by Bert E. Collyer, publisher and gentleman sportsman, recently returned from a protracted visit in the Dominion.

Writing editorially in his own newspapers, Collyer's Eye, and The Referee, Mr. Collyer says:

"Behind the sojourn on a ranch in Alberta, Canada, of the future king of Great Britain, is doubtless a political motive of the greatest importance to the English-speaking peoples on both sides of the big water. At the root is England's seeming population, always even in normal times excessive in comparison with acreage and power of self-support without outside supplies, but at the present time, with England's foreign trade seriously disarranged by unsatisfactory credits and chaotic conditions on the continent, actually distressing. Confronted with the problem of obtaining relief from surplus population, England has turned hopefully to her territory in North America. During the August harvesting in Canada herculean efforts were made to induce workers to ship from England with the hope that many, finding the gardens of their dreams in the New World, would remain as permanent settlers. Successful in part at least, this movement did not go sufficiently far to effect the complete remedy that is necessary. Now comes the Prince of Wales—as "Lord Renfrew," travelling incognito, as did his beloved grand-dad, the late King Edward, years ago—and settles down at Edward Prince Range, at High River, Alberta, for a family stay. The Englishmen, at home, reading of the keen enjoyment that the Prince finds in the healthy outdoor life and whole-some environment of Canada is quite likely to reason that what is good enough for the future King of England must certainly be good enough for the commoner. Thus the movement from crowded England to the broad spaces of the Dominion may set in with a vim and vigor impossible to have achieved by any less pretentious means. In aiding and abetting this policy of our surmise be correct, and this is the real motive for the princely visit of "Lord Renfrew" is indeed rendering a genuine service not only to Great Britain, but to the cause of civilization itself. Certainly the transplanting in good-ly quantities, of the Anglo-Saxon stock of England on the American continent will bring incalculable benefits to this side of the Atlantic. The "melting pot" on the other side of its surplus peoples, will make for a more wholesome development of the types of those that remain. But, whatever the motive, we are sincerely glad that Lord Renfrew is with us. Royalty has ever held and captured the heart of America since the days of his grandfather's youth."

The REFUGEES

By A. CONAN DOYLE,
Author of "The Return of Sherlock Holmes"

Copyright, 1893, by Harper & Brothers

"What do you mean, Adele? My uncle is hale and hearty, and he will accustom himself to this new life."

"If it only could be so! But I fear, I fear that he is over old for such a change. He says not a word of complaint, but I read upon his face that he is stricken to the heart."

De Catinat was about to suggest that the voyage might restore the merchant's health, when Adele gave a cry of surprise and pointed out over the port quarter.

"Look!" she cried. "There is something floating upon the sea. I saw it upon the crest of a wave."

He looked in the direction in which she pointed, but it was so far from him that he could make nothing of it, but sharper eyes than his had caught a glance of it. Amos Green had seen the girl point.

"Captain Ephraim," said he, "there's a boat on the starboard quarter."

The New England seaman whipped up his glass.

"Aye, it's a boat," said he, "but an empty one. Maybe it's been washed off from some ship or gone adrift from shore. Put her hard down, Mr. Tomlinson, for it just so happens that I am in need of a boat at present."

Half a minute later the Golden Rod had swung round and was driving swiftly down toward the black spot which still bobbed and danced upon the waves. As they neared her they could see that something was projecting over her side.

"It's a man's head!" cried Amos Green.

But Ephraim's grim face grew grimmer. "It's a man's foot," said he. "I think that you had best take the gal below to the cabin."

Amid a solemn hush they ran along side this lonely craft, which hung out no sinister a signal.

She was a little thirteen foot cockleshell, very broad for her length and so flat in the bottom that she had been meant evidently for river or lake work. Huddled together beneath the seats were three folk, a man in the dress of a respectable artisan, a woman of the same class and a little child about a year old. The boat was half full of water, and the woman and child were stretched with their faces downward, the fair curls of the infant and the dark locks of the mother washing to and fro like water weeds upon the surface. The man lay with a white corored face, his chin cocking up toward the sky, his eyes turned upward to the whites and his mouth open, showing a leathern crinkled tongue like a rotting leaf. In the bows, all huddled in a heap and with a single paddle still grasped in his hand, there crouched a very small man clad in black, an open book lying across his face and one stiff leg jutting upward, with the heel of the foot resting between the rowlocks.

A boat had been lowered by the Golden Rod, and the unfortunates were soon conveyed upon deck. No particle of either food or drink was to be found or anything save the single paddle and the open Bible, which lay across the small man's face. Man, woman and child had all been dead a day at the least, and so, with the short prayers used upon the seas, they were buried from the vessel's side. The small man had at first seemed also to be lifeless, but Amos had detected some slight flutter of his heart, and the faintest breath was left upon the watch glass which was held before his mouth. Wrapped in a dry blanket, he was laid beside the mast, and the mate forced a few drops of rum every few minutes between his lips until the little spark of life which still lingered in him might be fanned to a flame. Meanwhile Ephraim Savage had ordered up the two prisoners whom he had entrapped at Rochelle.

"Very sorry, captain," said the seaman, "but either you had to come with us, d'ye see, or we had to stay with you. They're waiting for me over at Boston, and as in truth I couldn't tarry. Which would you prefer, to go on with us to America or to go back to France?"

"Back to France, if I can find my way, if only to have a word with that fool of a gunner."

"Well, we emptied a bucketful of water over his shoulders and printing, d'ye see, a mighty sea-cold all the same. But there's a Frenchman that likes fighting is over yonder."

"I see it; I see it! Ah, if my feet were only upon it once more!"

"There is a boat beside us, and you may take it."

"My God, what happiness! Corporal Lemoine, the boat! Let us push off at once."

"But you need a few things first. Good Lord, who ever heard of a man pushin' off like that? Mr. Tomlinson, just sling a keg of water and a barrel of meat and of biscuit into this boat. 'Hiram Jefferson, take two oars aft. It's a long pull with the wind in your teeth, but you'll be t[illegible] by tomorrow night, and the w[illegible]ther fair."

The two French[illegible] were provided with all that [illegible] were likely to require and pushed off with a waving of hats and a shouting of "Bon voyage!" The yards was swung round again, and the Golden Rod turned her bowsprit for the west.

But while these things had been done the senseless man beneath the mast had twitched his eyelids, had drawn a little gasping breath and then finally had opened his eyes. Old Catinat had come upon deck, and at the sight of the man and of his dress he had run forward and had raised his head reverently.

"He is one of the faithful," he cried. "He is one of our pastors. Ah! Now indeed a blessing will be upon our journey!"

But the man smiled gently and shook his head. "I fear that I may not come this journey with you," said he, "for the Lord has called me upon a farther journey of my own. I have had my summons, and I am ready. I am indeed the pastor of the temple at Isigny, and when we heard the orders of the wicked king I and two of the faithful, with their little ones, put forth in the hope that we might come to England. But on the first day there came a wave which swept away one of our oars and all that was in the boat—our bread, our keg, and we were left with no hope save in him. And then he bade to call us to him, one at a time, first the child and then the woman and then the man, until I only am left, though I feel that my own time is not long. But, since ye are also of the faithful, may I not serve you in any way before I go?"

Kneeling hand in hand before the dying pastor.

The merchant shook his head, and then suddenly a thought flashed upon him, and he ran, with his face aglow, and whispered eagerly to Amos Green. Amos laughed and strode across to the captain.

"It's time," said Ephraim Savage grimly.

Then the whisperers went to De Catinat. He sprang in the air, and his eyes shone with delight. And then they went down to Adele in her cabin, and she started and blushed and turned her sweet face away and patted her hair with her hands as woman will when a sudden call is made upon her. And so, since haste was needful and since even letters upon the lips of a dying pastor, who raised his thin arm feebly in benediction as he muttered the words which should make them forever one.

Ere the stars had waned again one more sailor had fallen asleep on board the Golden Rod, and the scattered flock from Isigny had found their pastor once more.

CHAPTER XVIII.

FOR three weeks the wind kept at east or northeast, always at a brisk breeze and freshening sometimes into a gale. The Golden Rod sped merrily upon her way, with every sail drawing slow and aloft, so that by the end of the third week Amos and Ephraim Savage were reckoning out the hours before they could look upon their native land once more.

"Tomorrow we should make land by my reckoning," said Captain Savage.

"Ah, tomorrow! and what will it be—Mount Desert, Cape Cod, Long Island?"

"Nay, lad; we are in the latitude of the St. Lawrence and are more likely to see the Acadia coast. Then, if this wind, a day should carry us south, or two at the most. A few more such voyages, and I shall buy myself a fair brick house in Green lane of north Boston, where I can look down on the bay or on the Charles or the Mystic and see the ships comin' and goin'. So I would end my life in peace and quiet."

The mate's watch that night was from 12 to 4, and the moon was shining brightly for the first hour of it. In the early morning, however, it clouded over, and the Golden Rod plunged into one of those dank clammy mists which lie on all that tract of ocean. So thick was it that from the poop one could just make out the loom of the foresail, but could see nothing of the fore-topmast staysail or of the jib. The wind was northeast, with a very keen edge to it, and the dainty brigantine lay over, scudding along with her lee rails within hand's touch of the water. It had suddenly turned very cold—so cold that the mate stamped up and down the poop, and his four seamen shivered together under the shelter of the bulwarks. And then in a moment two of them was up, thrusting his forefinger into the air and screaming, while a huge white wall sprang out of the darkness at the very end of the lowsprit, and the ship struck with a force which snapped her two masts like dried reeds in a wind and changed her in an instant to a crushed and shapeless heap of spars and wreckage.

The mate had shot the length of the poop at the shock and had narrowly escaped from the falling mast, while of his four men two had been hurled through the huge gap which yawned in the bows, while a third had dashed his head to pieces against the stock of the anchor. Tomlinson staggered forward to find the whole front part of the vessel driven inward and a single seaman sitting dazed amid a splintered spars, flapping sails and writhing, lashing cordage. It was still as dark as pitch, and, save the white crest of a leaping wave, nothing was to be seen beyond the side of the vessel. The mate was peering round him in despair at the ruin which had come so suddenly upon them, when he found Captain Ephraim at his elbow, half dazed, but as wooden and serene as ever.

"An iceberg," said he, sniffing at the chill air. "Did you not smell it, friend Tomlinson?"

"Truly I found it cold, Captain Savage, but I set it down to the mist."

"There is a mist ever set around them, though the Lord in his wisdom knows best why, for it is a sore trial to poor sailor men. She makes water fast, Mr. Tomlinson."

The mate and two had swarmed upon deck, and one of them was measuring the well. "There is three feet of water," he cried, "and the pumps sucked dry yesterday."

"Hiram Jefferson and John Moreton, to the pumps!" cried the captain. "Mr. Tomlinson, clear away the longboat and let us see if we may set her right!"

The longboat has stove two planks," cried a seaman.

"The jolly boat, then!"

"She is in three pieces."

"Where is Amos Green?"

"Here, Captain Ephraim. What can I do?"

"And I?" asked De Catinat eagerly.

Adele and her father had been wrapped in mantles and placed for shelter in the lee of the roundhouse.

"Tell him that he can take his spell at the pumps," said the captain to Amos. "And you, Amos, you are a handy man with a tool. Get into yonder longboat with a lantern."

For half an hour Amos Green hammered and trimmed and calked.

"You've not much time, Amos lad," said the captain quietly.

"She'll float now, though she's not quite water tight."

"Very good. Lower away. Keep up the pumping there. Mr. Tomlinson, see that provisions and water are ready, as much as she will hold. Come with me, Hiram Jefferson."

The seaman and the captain swung themselves down into the tossing boat, the latter with a lantern strapped to his waist. Together they made their way until they were under her counsided bows. The captain shook his head when he saw the extent of the damage. "Cut away the foresail and pass it over," said he.

Tomlinson and Amos Green cut away the lashings with their knives and lowered the corner of the sail. Captain Ephraim and the seaman seized it and dragged it across the mouth of the huge gaping leak. "How much in the well?" he asked.

"Five and a half feet."

"Then the ship is lost. I could put my finger between her planks as far as I can see back. Keep the pumps going there! Have you the food and water, Mr. Tomlinson?"

"Here, sir."

"Lower them over the bows. This boat cannot live more than an hour or two. Can you see anything of the berg?"

The mist had thinned away suddenly, and the moon glimmered through once more upon the desolate lonely sea and the stricken ship. There, like a huge sail, was the monster piece of ice upon which they had shattered themselves.

"Yes, now I make for her," said Captain Ephraim. "There is no other chance. Lower the gal over the bows. Well, then, her father first, if she likes it better. Tell them to sit still, Amos, and that the Lord will be on us if we keep clear of foolishness. So! You're a brave lass for all your nimmy pimmy lingo. Now the keg and the barrel and all the wraps and cloaks you can find; and, by other gear, the Frenchman. Aye, aye, passengers first, and you have got to come! Now Amos, now the seamen, and you last, friend Tomlinson."

"I will that they had not very far to go, for the boat was weighted down almost to the edge, and it took the bailing of two men to keep in check the water which leaked in between the shattered planks. When all were safely in their places Captain Ephraim Savage swung himself aboard again, which was but too easy now that every mile he brought the bows nearer to the water. He came back with a bundle of clothing, which he threw into the boat. "Push off!" he cried.

"Jump in, then."

"Ephraim Savage goes down with his ship," said he quietly. "Friend Tomlinson, it is not my way to give my orders more than once. Push off, I say."

The mate thrust her out with a boat hook. Amos Green and De Catinat gave a cry of dismay, but the stolid New Englanders settled down to their oars and pulled off a few strokes.

"The boat leaks like a sieve," said the mate. "I will take her to the berg, leave you all there if we can find footing and go back for the captain."

But they had not been fifty strokes before Adele gave a sudden sc a. "My God!" she cried. "The ship is going down!"

She had settled lower and lower in the water, and suddenly with a sound of rending planks, she thrust down her bows like a diving waterfowl, her stern flew up into the air, and with a long sucking noise she shot down swifter and swifter, until the leaping waves closed over her high poop lantern. With one impulse the boat swept round again and made backward as fast as willing arms could pull it. But all was quiet at the scene of the disaster. Not even a fragment of wreckage was left upon the surface to show where the Golden Rod had found her last harbor. For a long quarter of an hour they pulled round and round in the moonlight, but no glimpse could they see of the Puritan seaman, and at last, when in spite of the bailers the water was washing round their ankles, they put her head about once more and made their way in silence and with heavy hearts to their dreary island of refuge.

Desolate as it was, it was their only hope now, for the seas were increasing, and it was evident that the boat could not be kept afloat long.

The cliff which faced them was precipitous, and it glimmered and sparkled all over where the silver light fell upon the thousand facets of ice. Right in the center, however, on a level with the water's edge, there was what appeared to be a huge hollowed out cave, which marked the spot where the Golden Rod had, in shattering herself, dislodged a huge bowlder, and so, amid her own ruin, prepared a refuge for those who had trusted themselves to her. This cavern was of the richest emerald green, light and clear at the edges, but toning away into the deepest purples and blues at the back. But it was not the beauty of this grotto which was of the assurance of rescue, which brought a cry of joy and of wonder from every lip, but it was that, seated upon an ice bowsher and placidly smoking a long corncob pipe, there was perched in front of them no less a person than Captain Ephraim Savage of Boston.

"Friend Tomlinson," said he, "when it tell you to row for an iceberg I mean you to row right away there, d'ye see, and not to go philandering about over the ocean. It's not your fault that I'm not froze, and so I would have been if I hadn't some dry tobacco and an tinder box to keep myself warm."

Without stopping to answer his commander's reproaches the mate headed for the ledge, which had been cut into slope by the brow of the brigantine, so that the boat came up easily on to the ice. Captain Ephraim seized his dry clothes and vanished into the back of the cave, to return presently warmer in body and more contented in soul. The longboat had been turned upside down for a seat, the gratings and thwarts taken out and covered with wraps to make a couch for the lady, and the boat knocked out of the keg of biscuits.

"We were much frightened for you, Ephraim," said Amos Green. "I had a heavy heart this night when I thought that I must never see you more."

"Tut, tut; nos; you should have known me better."

"But how came you here, captain?" asked Tomlinson. "I thought that may be you had been taken down by the suck of the ship."

"And so I was. It is the third ship in which I have gone down, but they have never kept me down yet. I went deeper tonight than when the Speedwell sank, but not so deep as in the Governor Winthrop. When I came up I swam to the berg, found this nook and crawled in. Glad I was to see you, for I feared that you had foundered."

"We put back to pick you up, and we passed you in the darkness. And what should we do now?"

"Rig up that boat sail and make quarters for the gal, then get our supper and such rest as we can, for there is nothing to be done tonight."

In the morning Amos Green was aroused by a hand upon his shoulder and, springing to his feet, found De Catinat standing beside him. The latter's face was grave, and his friend read danger in his eyes.

"What is it, then?"

"The berg. It is coming to pieces. I have been watching it. You see that crack which extends backward from the end of our grotto? Two hours ago I could scarce put my hand into it. Now I can slip through it with ease."

Amos Green walked to the end of the fissure and shipped a hand, and his friend had said, that a green sinuous crack extended away backward into the iceberg, caused either by the buffeting of the waves or by the gentle impulse of their vessel. He roused Captain Ephraim and pointed out the danger to him.

"Well, if she springs a leak we are gone," said he, "since I've been thawing pretty fast as it is."

They could see now that the whole huge mass was brittle and honeycombed and rotten.

"Perhaps it will not," cried Amos Green. "What's that? I could have sworn that I heard a voice."

"Impossible. We are all here."

"It must have been my fancy, then."

Captain Ephraim walked to the seaward face of the cave and swept the ocean with his eyes. "We should lie in the track of some ships," said he. "There's the codders and the herring fleet. We're overfar to th for them, I reckon. But we can't be more'n 200 mile from Port Royal, in Acadia, and we're in the line of the St. Lawrence trade. What is it, Amos?"

The young hunter was standing with his ear slanting, his head bent forward, and his eyes glancing sidewise like a man who listens intently. He was about to answer when De Catinat gave a cry and pointed to the back of the cave.

"Look at the crack now!"

It had widened by a foot since t'ey had noticed it last until it was now no longer a crack. It was a pass.

"Let us go through," said the captain.

He led the way, and the other two followed him. It was very dark as they advanced, with high dripping ice on either side and one little zig-zagging slit of blue sky above their heads. Tripping and groping their way, they stumbled along until suddenly the passage grew wider and opened out into a large square of flat ice. The berg was level in the center and sloped upward from that point to the high cliffs which bounded it on each side. With one impulse they began all three to clamber up until, a minute later, they were standing not far from the edge of the summit, seventy feet above the sea.

Adele Catinat looked about him with startled eyes. "I cannot understand it," said he. "I could have sworn—by the eternal, listen to that!"

From far away a military bugle rang out in the morning air. With a cry of amazement they all three craned forward and peered over the edge.

A large ship was lying under the very shadow of the iceberg. She lay looked straight down upon her snow white decks, fringed with shining brass cannon and dotted with seamen. A little clump of soldiers stood upon the poop, going through the manual exercise, and it was from them that the call had come which had sounded so unexpectedly in the ears of the cast aways. Standing back from the edge they had not only looked over the top masts of this welcome neighbor, but they had themselves been invisible from her decks. Now the discovery was mutual, as was shown by a chorus of shouts and cries from beneath them.

But the three did not wait an instant. Sliding and scrambling down the slippery incline, they rushed, shouting, through the crack and into the cave, where their comrades had just been startled by the sudden uproar in the middle of their cheerless breakfast. A few hurried words and the leaky longboat had been launched, their few possessions had been bundled in and they had pushed off once more. Pulling round a promontory of the berg, they found themselves under the stern of a fine corvet, the sides of which were lined with friendly faces, while from the peak there floated a huge white banner mottled over with the golden lilies of France. In a very few minutes their boat had been hauled up, and they found themselves on board of the St. Christopher, manof-war, conveying Marquis de Denonville, the governor general of Canada, to take over his new duties.

CHAPTER XIX.

A SINGULAL: colony it was of which the shipwrecked party found themselves now to be members. The St. Christophe had left Rochelle three weeks before with four small vessels conveying 500 soldiers to help the straggling colony on the St. Lawrence. The squadron had become separated, however, and the governor was pursuing his way alone in the huge ship, picking up the others in the river. Aboard he had a company of the regiment of Quercy, the staff of his own household, St. Vallier the new bishop of Canada, with twelve priests and his attendants, three Recollet friars, five Jesuits bound for the fatal Iroquois mission, half a dozen ladies on the way to join their husbands, two Ursuline nuns and ten or twelve gallants whom love of adventure and the hope of bettering their fortunes had drawn across the seas.

There was peace between England and France at present, though a fierce war ran high between Canada and New York, the French believing, and with some justice, that the English colonists were whooping on the demons who struck them down. Ephraim and his men were therefore received hospitably on board, though the ship was so crowded that they had to sleep wherever they could find cover and space for their hammocks. De Catinat, too, had been treated in an even more kindly fashion, the weak old man and the beauty of his daughter arousing the interest of the governor himself. De Catinat had during the voyage exchanged his uniform for a plain somber suit, so that, except for his military bearing, there was nothing to show that he was a fugitive from the King. De Catinat was now so weak that he was past the answering of questions, his daughter was forever at his side, and the soldiers were diplomatist enough, after a trashing at Versailles, to say much without saying anything, and so their secret was still preserved.

On the day after the rescue they sighted Cape Canso on the south, and, running swiftly before an easterly wind, saw the loom of the east end of Anticosti. Then they sailed up the mighty river, though from midchannel the dark banks on either side were hardly to be seen. As the shores narrowed in they saw the wild gorge of the Saguenay river upon the right, with the smoke from the little fishing and trading station of Tadousac streaming up above the pine trees. Thence the ship tacked on up the river past Mal Baie. Amos Green, leaning on the bulwarks, stared with longing eyes at the interminable belt of virgin woodland, hardly traversed save by an occasional wandering savage or hardy coureur de bois. Then the bold outline of Cape Tourmente loomed up in front of them. They passed the rich, placid meadows of Laval's seigneury of Beaupre, and, skirting the settlements of the island of Orleans, they saw the broad pool stretched out in front of them—the falls of Montmorenci, the high palisades of Point Levi, the cluster of vessels, and upon the right that wonderful rock, with its dismantled towers, and its township huddled round its base, the center and stronghold of French power in America.

The old merchant had pined away since he had left French soil, like a plant which has been plucked from its roots. The shock of the shipwreck and the night spent in their bleak refuge upon the iceberg had been too much for his years and strength.

Since they had been picked up he had lain amid the scurvy stricken soldiers, with hardly a sign of life save for his thin breathing and the twitching of his scraggy throat. Now, however, he opened his eyes and raised himself slowly and painfully upon his elbow.

"What is it, father? What can we do for you?" cried Adele. "We are in America, and here is Amos and here am I, your children."

But the old man shook his head. "The Lord has called me to the promised land, but he has not willed that I should enter into it," said he. "But at least I should wish, like Moses, to gaze upon it if I cannot set upon it."

A minute later the old merchant was on deck, and the two young men had placed him upon a coil of rope with his back against the mast, where he could see all way from the crush. The soldiers were already crowding down into the boats, and all were so busy over their own affairs that they paid no heed to the little group of refugees who had gathered round the stricken man. He turned his head painfully from side to side, and his gaze fell slowly over his eyes, which had been looking away out past Point Levi at the rolling woods and the far-off mountains. Adele gave a quick cry of despair and threw her arms round the old man's neck.

"He is dying, Amory he is dying" she cried.

A stout Franciscan friar who had been telling his beads within a few paces of them heard the cry.

"He is indeed dying," he said as he gazed down at the aged face. "Has the old man had the sacraments of the church?"

But the old Huguenot had opened his eyes, and with a last flicker of strength he pushed away the gray hooded figure and bent over him.

"I left all that I have rather than yield to you," he cried, "and think you that you can overcome me now?"

The Franciscan started back at the words, and his dark, suspicious eyes shot from De Catinat to the weeping girl.

"So!" said he, "You are Huguenots, then?"

"Hush! Do not wrangle before a man who is dying"; cried De Catinat in a voice as fierce as his own.

"Before a man who is dead," said Amos Green solemnly.

As he spoke the old man's face had relaxed, his thousand wrinkles had been smoothed suddenly out as though an invisible hand had passed over them, and his head fell back against the mast. Adele remained motionless, with her arms still clasped round his neck and her cheek pressed against his shoulder. She had fainted.

The Recollet priest, his wife and bore her down to the cabin of one of the ladies who had already shown them some kindness. A brief order was given that the old merchant should be buried in the river that night, and then, sewn for a sailmaker who fastened the canvas round him, mankind had done its last for Theophile Catinat.

With sorrow in their hearts, it was different and when the troops were all disembarked they were mustered in a little group upon the deck, and an officer of the governor's staff declared upon the part of the governor that the Huguenot refugees should be allowed to land in safety. Then, speaking in English, which is Captain Savage?"

"Edmund Savage of Boston."

"And Master Amos Green?"

"Amos Green of New York."

"And Master Tomlinson?"

"John Tomlinson of Salem."

"And Master Mariners Hiram Jefferson, Joseph Moreton, Jacob Grace Spaulding and Paul Cushing, all of Massachusetts Bay?"

"We are here"

"Then the governor's orders that all who shall be named shall be conveyed at once to the trading brig Hope, which is yonder ship with the white paint line on the side within the hour for the English province."

A burst of joy broke from the castaway mariners at the prospect of being so speedily restored to their homes, and they hurried away to gather together their few possessions before they had arrived from the wreck. The officer put his list in his pocket and stepped across to where De Catinat leaned moodily against the bulwarks.

"What is to be done with us?" asked De Catinat.

"You are to be confined to the ship until she sails, which will be in a week at the furthest."

Names of London's Outskirts.

Some districts in the outskirts of London, England, got their names in strange ways.

The district known as Soho has been called by that name since the sixteenth century. "So ho!" was the cry of the huntsmen when calling off their harriers in the days when the whole of that part of London was open country.

Smithfield is a modern perversion of "Smooth-field," an extensive stretch of meadow-land where horses were sold and tournaments were held as far back as the fourteenth century.

Clerkenwell gets its name from an ancient holy well beside which the parish clerks performed their Miracle Plays.

The proper name for Bunhill Fields is Bonhill, that is, "good hill" fields, so called because the victims of the Great Plague were buried there in 1665.

Moorfields used to be a bleak moor skirting the marshy land known as Fensbury, now called Finsbury.

Haggerston is a corruption of Hargotestan, which is Saxon meaning "Our God's Town." Holloway reminds us that this was once a miry hollow between Highgate and Islington.

Kilburn owes its name to the Kil, the Celtic word for a cell, once occupied by "one Godwyne, a hermit," beside the bourne, or stream.

Acton is an Anglo-Saxon name for "Oak Town," meaning the town near the oak forest, and Battersea was the old English for "Shepherd's Town."

Greenwich means the green town.

Catford stands for Catsford, where the cattle forded the stream the river Ravensbourne, and Brixton comes from the Anglo-Saxon "Brigestan, or "bridge of stone."

Scotland Losing Best Blood.

Exodus of Scotsmen and boys to America has stripped the cities of Scotland until the streets of Glasgow and Edinburgh are beginning to look like they did in war time. Hoping to support this movement were 134 Scottish mechanics and tradesmen seeking to enter the United States for permanent residence. "There are a lot who stay, lazy fellows, who take the dole, but the best blood of Scotland is pouring to America because of the lack of employment. The saddest thing is that the men are coming and the women are remaining. Now our women are averaging eight and nine years older than the men, and can scarcely make enough to make a wife."

Magna Carta.

Runnymede, the Thames-swept meadowland where the Magna Carta was signed and sealed, will become the site of a magnificent memorial park and place of annual pilgrimage on Magna Carta Day hopes J. W. Hamilton, founder and secretary of the International Magna Carta Day Association. Every British Dominion, every state of the American republic, and the cities and towns of the British Isles will be asked to give a stone for the temple.

SOFT WATER CISTERNS

Very Practical Instruction as to How to Build.

Have the Cistern Large Enough—The Capacity Usually Required—How to Build—The Bottle Type Cistern Most Common In Ontario.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

When you build a cistern make it large enough. Dry periods with the resulting water shortage must be guarded against, and the best insurance is a cistern of large capacity.

Capacity.

A round cistern 10 feet deep and 8 feet in diameter will hold 119 barrels of water, or approximately 3,750 gallons.

For the ordinary household where soft water is to be used for all purposes other than cooking, it is well to figure on a daily water use per individual of not less than 12 gallons. To carry the household safely through the long winter period the cistern should have a storage capacity sufficient for the requirements of each individual to last at least 120 days. Each member of the family would, therefore, require for that period in a modern house 1,440 gallons of water. This figure includes the requirement for toilet bath, laundry, and housecleaning.

How much then will the roof of a farm house collect in a year? In Southern Ontario the quantity of water collected from the roof of a 30 x 40 cupboard, if properly constructed, will be not less than 22,000 gallons. In Northern Ontario, where a greater part of the precipitation is in the form of snow, the water collected may not be more than half the figure given for Southern Ontario. It is a large quantity anyway, and ample for the needs of a family of four people, if all were collected and saved.

Building the Cistern.

The structure must be strong enough to stand the strain exerted by the pressure outward and downward of a large body of water. After specifying the size required and the location, excavation of the desired dimension is made and a foundation laid. Re-inforced concrete is the best foundation and best material. The re-inforcing can be stiff barrel wood, old piping, railroad iron, small I beams or angle iron imbedded in the cement used in sufficient quantity to prevent any cracking through settling of the soil or weight of water above. The strongest type for the walls is that of the monolithic or concrete re-inforced with metal, wire or rods. Strong walls can, however, be built of stone, tile, brick or concrete blocks that will stand the heavy strain, providing such are re-inforced and well backed with firm soil. Re-inforcing metal should be used in all cistern walls no matter what material is used in the structure. Without re-inforcing cracks that are difficult to close may develop and open.

For cisterns over eight feet in diameter the re-inforcing should consist of vertical wrought iron rods, long enough to reach from the foundation to the top of the wall. With such spaced in the masonry at intervals of two feet and connected with number three wire at eighteen inch intervals, the cistern wall will be strengthened to withstand any pressure likely to be put on it.

The Bottle Type Cistern.

The bottle type cistern is generally used in Ontario. The advantage of the bottle type is in that the surface exposed area is reduced. An equally good cistern can be made with vertical walls all the way up. A 6 in. concrete cover could be made for such fly re-inforcing with I beams, or large iron piping. A man sole should be provided in the top or cover. An iron pipe for the overflow pipe must be provided for at the intended high water level. A section of pipe of suitable size for a pump to draw the water will be built into the cistern wall at a height to suit the location when it is planned to install a pump. All pipe passing in cistern walls should be set in a mixture of one part fine sand and one part cement. Cement walls that are required to hold water should be carefully constructed of good clean material, well mixed and in proper proportions, one part cement, three parts clean sharp sand, four parts coarse gravel, or small stone. In building, the green concrete should be well tamped and worked down against the sides of the forms in order to make a smooth wall. The horizontal re-inforcing iron can be put in as the wall goes up. With any such tanks or cisterns the corners require special attention and must be strengthened by imbedding heavy iron. Iron bars one inch in cross section or inch pipe can be used for this purpose, after being bent to the desired shape. Scrap iron from old implements can be used to advantage in re-inforcing concrete, and there is generally a sufficiency of such old iron about the farm to answer the demand for re-inforcing any concrete work that may be undertaken. Where cement block or hollow tile are used in cistern construction, the space within the ties are best filled with cement concrete, such will permit of better pointing and also strengthen the wall. Eight iron rods or four strands of number three wire should be imbedded in the cement on each round of blocks is set. Ordinary building brick, set in cement mortar make very good and durable cisterns. All masonry cisterns should be given a coat of cement plaster inside. If no re-inforcing iron is used then care should be taken to pack the soil on the outside of the cistern wall firmly to increase the walls resistance against pressure outward.—L. Stevenson, Dept. of Extension, O. A. College, Guelph.

Bees Were Killed.

Easily 25 per cent. of the bees of Ontario, owing to the prolonged winter and cold spring, died, thus reducing the honey crop, says R. F. Holterman, Brantford. In Southwestern Ontario, say, west of London, the honey crop is medium to poor; from there to Toronto and even beyond, the crop is dull, but where the weather has been very dry the honey crop will be meagre.

Manufacturers of hives and bee-keepers' requisites state that the reduced amount of late orders for their product indicates a much smaller crop this year than last.

LOVELY LANDSCAPES.

The Scot will vote for the prospect from Stirling Castle, which includes almost the whole breadth of Scotland from sea to sea.

If the Scot had a second choice he would plump probably for the view from Arthur's Seat, Edinburgh, for the spectator not only sees the fair-examplied view of the Modern Athens, as the Scot calls his beautiful Edinburgh, but also the Firth of Forth and the Kingdom of Fife beyond.

The Welshman, however, would have something to say about his landscapes. He would tell you that when the visibility is good you can "nearly" see New York from the top of Snowdon. Then the Scot would retort that Snowdon is a mountain and not a hill, and that "when there is no fog, and no rain, and no snow-drift," the view from Ben Nevis is wonderful.

Then the Welshman will take you to task for the remark about the "when the visibility is good you can "nearly" see New York from the top of Snowdon. Then the Scot would retort that Snowdon is a mountain and not a hill, and that "when there is no fog, and no rain, and no snow-drift," the view from Ben Nevis is wonderful.

Then the Welshman will take you to task for the remark about the "when the visibility is good you can "nearly" see New York from the top of Snowdon. There is no "nearly" about it, he will tell you, for on a clear day you can see all North Wales at your feet; or to Tintern Abbey, to see the Wye winding through the woods for miles and miles.

England has so many splendid views from its hill-tops that it is difficult to decide which is the best. Many people vote for the wonderful prospect, on a clear day, from the top of the Cheviot, the centre for that period in a modern house of 1,440 gallons of water. This figure includes the requirement for toilet bath, laundry, and housecleaning.

How much then will the roof of a farm house collect in a year? In Southern Ontario the quantity of water collected from the roof of a 30 x 40 cupboard, if properly constructed, will be not less than 22,000 gallons. In Northern Ontario, where a greater part of the precipitation is in the form of snow, the water collected may not be more than half the figure given for Southern Ontario. It is a large quantity anyway, and ample for the needs of a family of four people, if all were collected and saved.

WIGS IN LAW COURTS

QUAINT OLD CUSTOMS WHICH STILL SURVIVE.

Ontario Courts Less Picturesque Than British—Scarlet Still Meets Ontario High Court on Circuit—With Cocked Hat on Head and Drawn Sword In Hand—Cloth Brief Bags.

Canadians who knew London a generation ago will recall the ubiquitous top hat and the frock or else the morning coat which accompanied it. Everyone, from bank clerk to duke, was garbed in these rather funereal clothes. You could almost tell the various grades in the topper brigade by the state of a man's silk hat, the cut and material of his coat and the nattiness of his boots. Spats generally seemed to be reserved for those known as "professional men." After the topper men came those who wore derbies and short and long coats, and after the general mass of the male citizens, the factory workers, tenants and others who wore tweed-hued clothes and invariably cloth caps. Before the war, however, the top hat was fast disappearing as an article of daily wear and with it the frock coat and even the "claw-hammer." Now they tell us that a movement has been set afoot, probably by the tailors, to restore the top hat and tail coat to their former prominence as articles of daily apparel and accordingly the conditions happily unknown in Canada.

Of all occupations, the law has preserved its sartorial relics of former days in the most marked. British barristers appearing in court must still wear the small powdered wig of the eighteenth century. High court judges, of the law lords and lord justices of appeal, still appear in black gowns trimmed with gold lace, and chief justices are resplendent in full-bottomed wigs and gowns of James II. time and crimson robes trimmed with ermine. With the vestments which date from medieval times, some quaint old observances also survive. A pair of white gloves is still presented to a judge who, travelling on circuit, happens on a town where no criminal cases confronts him. Judges on circuit are received in great state, handed bouquets of flowers, entertained at banquets and escorted through the streets by something reminiscent of the men-at-arms who used to guard them in olden days.

Not since Chief Justice Sir William Osgoode and his contemporaries of the bar, who were made famous by Sir Simcoe's executive council, practiced in the courts, at which time the headdress was universal, do Ontario lawyers wear wigs. Osgoode Hall, in 1821, during Trinity term, in the first and second year of the reign of William IV., the convocation of the Law Society of Upper Canada issued a standing order as follows: "Ordered that every member of the society shall, upon his call, be invested with robes and full bottom wig suited to the convocation." There is no mention of wigs, which suggests that the wig fiend was not yet in the law lawyer's dress even 92 years ago."

Later, the Bar got into the habit of wearing an ordinary white bow tie, though the wig and gown continued to appear in bands. The late Sir Aemilius Irving is responsible for the return of the bands to the junior bar of Ontario. In a case, December, 1908, he was appearing before the Supreme Court, Ottawa, in the Province and the Dominion. "G. H. Sedgewick, K.C., was also on the case, accompanied by the latter's junior, now H. S. White, K.C. Sir Aemilius, the night before argument, presented Mr. White with an envelope which proved to contain bands. Mr. White asked if he had a right to wear them. "Of course," replied Sir Aemilius. "I was called in them in 1845."

Many years ago the judges of the Queen's Bench used to wear a purple gown with deep cuffs and a salmon-colored collar. But this gown which is still worn by judges of the superior courts, and by judges of the Supreme Court, Ottawa, is a never been worn within the memory of elder members of the bar. Even the robes worn by the judges at Osgoode Hall, all are shown in colored robes but none in wigs.

The old-time cloth brief sack which legal flights carried slung over their shoulders has, too, almost disappeared. Judge Falconbridge used a green bag, K.C.'s one red, and the junior bar, black. Mr. Justice Mason is one of the few who still carries a bag. A generation ago, this familiar leather hand bag is giving place to the more useful portfolio or attache case.

Every sheriff who meets Ontario High Court judges on circuit, at the railway station, escorts them to their hotel and attends them to and from court. And it is recorded that Mr. Justice Riddell has been instrumental in perpetuating the old custom whereby the deputy sheriff, at the opening of the Assizes at Toronto, does a cocked hat and, with a drawn sword in hand, escorts the judge's battle through the corridors to the court room. Judge Riddell, it is understood, is the last Ontario Judge to wear the black cap, on the rare occasions when he has to pass the death sentence. This grim old ceremony still obtains in England, it seems failing that once in the lifetime of a judge.

Leverhulme on Smoking.

Lord Leverhulme, who has been giving further advice, never minces matters, and "compromise," I imagine, is a word he cordially dislikes.

"No man," he said the other day, "could run a successful business if he allowed his assistants to smoke in the shop. Tobacco has its right and proper place, but not in business hours. The man who smokes at business reduces his efficiency."

Rather drastic! There is one man, I know, who thinks so. He quoted Leverhulme's speech and said that he always smoked at his business, and profited by it.

"What do you smoke?" I asked. "Haddocks," he replied.

16,500,000 Books Printed.

Basing conclusions on what is considered reliable data, an English librarian estimates that since the invention of printing in Europe in the fifteenth century the output of the world's book presses has amounted to about 16,500,000 copies, of which some 4,400,000 have been printed since 1900. The librarian believes that perhaps 20,000 of all the books printed still possess value.

ATTACKED BY SHARKS.

Three Australian Fishermen Devoured by Hungry Monsters.

Fishermen in Australia are beset with terrible dangers unknown in Canadian waters.

A fishing expedition of four men which set out from Bellambi, near Wollongong, N.S.W., had an appalling sequel, the last being attacked by a school of hungry sharks, three of the men being devoured.

The party consisted of: George Clarke, aged 30; Garnet Powell, 36; James Hislop, 50; and John Hartley, 40. All except the latter lost their lives.

The party, as was customary with them, went out fishing in a 14-foot skiff off Bellambi Reef, two miles from the shore, at about 7.30 on the fateful morning with the intention of catching snapper. They had been fishing some time when one saw rushing towards the reef a school of mantaris, evidently in pursuit of the snapper the fishermen sought.

Recognizing the danger that confronted them, the men did not panic, but immediately got to work with the oars, but before they could move the skiff any distance one of the school either rushed or hit the skiff and knocked a hole in her side. The boat began to fill with alarming rapidity, although the men hurriedly stuffed their coats and boots into the gaping hole their efforts proved fruitless, and the skiff sank, at the same time losing her oars.

For some time the men appeared to have tried to hang on to the boat as she floated half submerged. Mr. Rigby then suggested that he and Mr. Butler should set out for the shore. Before Mr. Butler had gone far, however, a fishing line caught round his legs, and he had to return to the boat. Mr. Rigby swam on, but a few minutes afterwards his companion, Mr. Powell, has gave a cry, was heard, and he sank. Mr. Butler then helped to support Mr. Clarke, who was endeavoring to hang on to the rolling framework of the boat, but, worn out with the strain and his exertions, Mr. Clarke let go and sank. He was seen no more.

Meanwhile Mr. Powell had been clinging to the stern of the boat in dreadful mental agony, as was Mr. Butler, for they were far from land, with the monsters of the deep still prowling round them. Suddenly Mr. Powell, who had made a brave fight to keep afloat, sank from sight. Then in one of its rolling motions, the boat being now lightened, turned over, Mr. Butler, who was in a fearful and exhausted condition, climbed inside, and sat in the submerged shell, the sides of which served as a shield from the monsters who waited to devour him.

Hour after hour passed, and still the unequal conflict went on with fate, when a miracle occurred. He sighted the collier Kurrara, which had left Sydney during the morning for Wollongong, and making for the skiff, Mr. Butler waved frantically for some time, and at last his signals of distress were seen and the captain stopped and sent a boat, manned with men fishing near the shore was then summoned by the collier, and Mr. Butler was taken to land, with the wrecked skiff in tow. He received medical attention.

The police made an exhaustive search in the vicinity of the tragedy, but darkness set in, and they were forced to return to the beach, where hundreds of people had gathered.

Micawber Turned Up.

Mr. Micawber, who was always living beyond his means and hoping for something to turn up, and who was blessed with an ever faithful wife and twins, is one of the best known characters in Charles Dickens' book. David Copperfield. Some biographers have insinuated that the original of Mr. Micawber was the novelist's own father, who was a poor clerk and often in money difficulties. Another claim now suggests that the original Micawber came from York. This man was Richard Dicken, strolling actor, lawyers' clerk, engineers' clerk, and finally a railway clerk. It was in the latter role that he met Alfred Lambert, Dickens, younger brother of the novelist, who was a civil engineer engaged on railway work in the East Riding of Yorkshire, and through him was brought to the notice of the man who, under the name of Micawber, was to give him undying fame. But there are many more Mr. Micawbers.

Canadian for World Court.

Eugene Lafleur, K.C., D.C.L., LL.D., who has been nominated to succeed Sir Lyman Duff Judge of the International Court of Justice, at The Hague, is of Swiss origin, his father being the late Rev. Theodore Lafleur, D.D., a Baptist minister. Born at Longeuil, Quebec, he graduated with distinction at McGill University, and was called to the bar in 1881. He became a K.C. in 1899. In 1900 he received the degree of D.C.L. from McGill; in 1921 he was honored with the degree of LL.D. at the time of the McGill centennial.

He was elected Batonnier of the Montreal Bar in 1906, and batonnier-General of the Bar of the Province of Quebec in the same year. He has been connected with many famous cases, and in 1911 had the signal honor to be chosen by the governments of the United States and Mexico as arbitrator to decide the location of the boundary line between the two countries on the Chanzer region. His decision was accepted without question by the two countries.

For several years Mr. Lafleur was professor of International Law at McGill University, retiring in 1909. He has appeared in many cases in London, and the late Lord Alverstone on one occasion said that of all the overseas lawyers coming to plead before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Mr. Lafleur was the best balanced and the most learned.

Mr. Lafleur is at present head of the well-known firm of Lafleur, MacDougall, Macfarlane & Barclay, and is one of the most popular men of the legal profession in Montreal. He is considered on of the ablest lawyers in Canada, possessed of the very finest natural abilities, and an equally ready speaker in French and English.

Cost of Telephones.

Montreal is substituting automatic telephones for human operators gradually as the girls marry off. It is a good thing. No girl can stand more than eight years of telephone work. The girls are on their feet the entire day with the shortest intervals for meals and rest. Take away time for passing a call is twelve seconds. The strain is appalling. After two or three years their efficiency decreases. They college a few years after.

Historical Relics of Canada

The movement now on foot to preserve Fort George, and Fort Louisbourg, battlefields in the neighborhood of Niagara-on-the-Lake, is another evidence of the spirit which inspired the effort of the Niagara Historical Society in collecting historical relics of value and displaying them to great advantage in Memorial Hall. The collection, which had its inception in May, 1896, now includes more than 6,000 relics, the historical building having been built under the auspices of the Historical Society in 1906. A teacher in the Public School of Niagara many years, Miss Janet Carnochan, whose love of country, deep-seated interest in historic lore and unflagging zeal have been the most important factors in building up the collection sympathetically, exhibits and explains the story of relics to the boys and girls.

Vividly the war of 1812-1814 is recalled to the mind of the visitor looking upon the military articles hoarded in the museum. The cocked hat of Gen. Brock, which arrived in Canada soon after his death, but used at services in connection with his interment in 1824 and 1855, is of particular interest as also is the old flag, supposed to have figured in the war of 1812 and discovered under the roof of the house of Henry Woodruff, St. David's. The scarlet coats of the militia of more than 100 years ago include one worn by Col. D. Mac-Dougal, then an ensign at the battle of Lundy's Lane, July 25, 1814, when he was severely wounded. Also the coat worn by Major Shaw 1812-1814. Reminiscent of these years of warfare in the Niagara district are the treasured water bottle of wood used in 1813, and marked with the broad arrow; belt and bayonet of 1812; sutrup, sash and epaulettes of Col. W. D. Miller, engaged in 1812; buttons, found in a grave at St. Mark's, of a United States officer and of Canadian volunteers, 1813; fragment of Vrooman's Battery, 1813; standing order for York Regiment, 1813; fragment of shell fired during the war of 1812; piece of sycamore tree, pierced by bullet in 1812; pocket book of Captain Marten McClellan, killed at the capture of Fort George, May 27, 1813; a collection of cannon balls that came over to Niagara from the enemy and the military strong box of Gen. Murray and documents previous to 1812.

The visitor to the historical building has a thrill as he touches the sword dented by the gun butt at the capture of Fort Niagara, Dec. 19, 1813. Many other interesting weapons of warfare are found in a cavalry sword, pistol, carbine and rifle and old flint-lock gun. Buttons, buckles and badges tell stories of heroes of the Niagara district, including, while engravings, photos, oil paintings and etchings adorning the walls picture officers and military commissions and orders. Of more than various governors, with water color sketches of the old forts painted over 100 years ago.

Many of Laura Secord are cherished in the sketch of the course she covered in her perilous journey from Queenston to Beaver Dams, June 23, 1812, made by Mrs. Curzon; the copper kettle in which was hidden the gold during time of danger, and the bread board on which Laura Secord cut her Niagara home. The history of the country's home life during the war of 1812-14 is depicted in the displaying beautiful antique clothing, including the white linen dress coat and knee breeches of George Ball, Sprucedale; fine linen woven in flax grown, heckled, spun and woven near Welland, and specimens of wool, carded, spun and woven in the same district, give a picture of the busy housewives of the olden days.

Old, old china, Wedgwood, Derby and Delft ware, and quaint old charm. One small plate of Willow pattern is extremely interesting and belonging to Capt. Van Dusen, R.N., who took the bit of china for safety during the war of 1812. Lustre ware, brass and pewter gleam among the antiques in the museum, in the entrancing corner, with crane, tinder box, wadle irons, foot-warmers, baking oven and irons, long-handled frying pan, griddle, flax wheel, candle lamps, the bellows, old oaken bucket and candle moulds. From the gallery of the historical building there looks down on the museum a fine collection of Indian relics, including tomahawks. Neighboring with the bed are wood-en cradles, in which sleep over a century ago such historic figures as Mrs. Dougall, Macfarlane & Barclay, and is one of the most popular men of the legal profession in Montreal. He is considered on of the ablest lawyers in Canada, possessed of the very finest natural abilities, and an equally ready speaker in French and English.

MRS. ANDERSON TELLS WOMEN

Leslie, Sask.—"For about a year I was troubled with a distressing downbearing pain before and during the periods, and had constant headaches and backache. I hated to go to a doctor, and as I knew several women who had taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound with good results, I finally bought some and took four bottles of it. I certainly do recommend it to every woman with troubles like mine. I feel fine now and hope to be able to keep your medicine on hand at all times, as women ought to be without it in the house."—Mrs. OSCAR A. ANDERSON, Box 16, Leslie, Sask.

Mrs. Kelsey Adds Her Testimony

Copenhagen, N. Y.—"I read your advertisement in the papers and my husband ordered me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to get relief from pains and weakness. I was so weak that I could not walk at times. Now I can do my housework and help my husband out doors, too. I am willing for you to publish this letter if you think it will help others."—Mrs. HERBERT KELSEY, R.F.D., Copenhagen, N. Y.

Sick and ailing women everywhere in the Dominion should try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before they give up hope of recovery. C

ACCEPTED OXFORD AS MODEL.

Architecture of New Paris, University Will Be the Same.

Architects' plans and illustrations are now published in the French press of the new Paris university buildings on the site of the demolished fortifications and away from the crowded Latin quarter. It is interesting to learn that the architect for the first block has abandoned the conventional French style and gone to Oxford for his models, remarks the Manchester Guardian.

A writer in l'Illustration curiously describes the architecture as "Anglo-Hollandais," but as a matter of fact the design bears a great resemblance to the new Brasenose buildings. The ground plan reveals ample space that is to be devoted to lawns and trees. We are not told whether an attempt is to be made to rival Oxford's carefully tended lawns — and playing fields. In the latter space is to have been carefully marked off for "football," "Rugby" and "baseball."

Students at English universities — and especially at the older university cities — may feel a little envious when they learn the cost of living in the new Paris establishment. The price of a well-equipped room, one of whose luxuries will be that "hot and cold running water," which the French now are going in for in a big way in every well-regulated establishment, will be 90 francs a month, and the maximum price for a room without bath 70 francs a month, and the maximum price for dinner or lunch will be three francs. Both men and women are to find rooms in the hotels.

M. Emile Deutsche de la Meurthe, the generous donor of the first block, has provided that the rent to be paid for whose rooms are to be found in the first instances 100 must be women. Among foreign countries that have already promised to establish hotels for their students on the new site are Canada and Argentina. Some of the students are to say that the University of Oxford has been asked to take a hand in the scheme.

Canada's New Building.

Official announcement of the accepting of the premises for the Canadian Government office's in London was made recently by Hon. P. C. Larkin, Canadian High Commissioner. The High Commissioner states that the crown lease of the premises in Trafalgar Square, on the south side, extending from the Strand to the site purchased by the Dominion Government. This is the finest building in Trafalgar Square, and the Canadian Gallery and offices are regarded as being unequalled in London. Trafalgar Square is often referred to as the finest square in the world, and widely known locally in the world.

Canada will not enter into occupation of its handsome building until the end of 1924, in the meantime certain external architectural features will be added to it and the interior will be modified to suit the requirements as necessary, but the inside has dignified proportions containing decorations of artistic merit, so many of these rooms will be adapted to the Dominion's requirements with comparatively little change.

A Battle of Wasps.

To wage war upon the corn-boring worm, wasps of parasitic habit are being imported to Canada from the United States, according to a writer in Tit-Bits.

The wasp is the hereditary enemy of the worm, which it first kills and then consumes.

Wherever corn is grown in America the wasp, when it thrives, takes each year his toll of the crops and reducing their value by millions of dollars. Its method is to bore within the fresh stalk of the tiny plant, and safe his way through the milky way, completing his work of destruction long before the grain has matured.

Until entomologists discovered in France the tiny wasp, no method was known of destroying the borer within the stalks of the corn.

When introduced to America the parasitic wasp, it was found took kindly to the climate and reared large families. Moreover, it was discovered he had a predilection for corn-borers, making his home on the husk of the grain within easy striking distance of his game.

Higher Education.

Extension work in the University of Toronto during the year ending June 30th there were 2,177 special students in various extension courses; 300 of these were engaged in work leading to the B.A. degree and of this number 117 attended the recent summer session, which lasted from July 3rd to August 4th; they are all teachers. Of the remainder 1314 Toronto teachers attended afternoon classes and 33 Hamilton teachers attended the evening classes and 10 in Galt. In addition to the extension department during the winter.

"BOLIVIA" IS ONE OF THE NEW COATINGS FOR FALL SMART STYLES ARE OBTAINABLE AT $39.50 EACH PLAIN OR FUR-TRIMMED

The surface of "Bolivia" cloth resembles the skin of a "Peach." The fabric is all wool, is soft and pliable. It is especially appropriate for coat-making as its rich, lustrous pile finish adds greatly to the attractiveness of the styles obtainable.

The Coats are developed on long, slender tube lines. Invariably they fasten on the side with a large button, with a belt or with belt and buttons.

At $39.50 each, these are outstanding values.

All wool, Canadian Velour Coats with Beaverine collars at $20.00.

Other fur-trimmed Coats are priced from $24.50 up to $79.50.

Tailored Burberry models are priced from $22.50 up.

Coon trimmed Burberry Coats are priced at $39.50.

GIRLS' COATS ADOPT SENIOR STYLES. TAILORED TYPES ARE PARTICULARLY STRESSED FOR GIRLS FROM 8 TO 14 YEARS

For school-wear it is hard to picture anything more becoming or comfortable than one of our cosy "Burberry" styled coats. From their smart notched collar to the last leather button they are exact reproductions of women's styles. Much smartness is added by the use of patch pockets and all-round belt.

Our coats are made up from real heavy, all wool coatings that come in various Brown shades, Lovat and Polo shades.

Priced according to size from $8.50 to $17.50.

"Fur-collared" coats also come in for a good share of attention this Fall. Usually these coats are made from Velour and Duvetyn. Youthful lines are admirably expressed by straps, pin tucks, silk thread stitching, pockets and belts. Usually "Beaverine" fur is the choice in moderately priced garments. Coats are invariably lined through-out, thus each garment is warm and durable.

Shades of Sand, Fawn, Brown, Copen and Navy are fashionable. Priced according to size from $8.00 to $20.00.

In lower priced styles "Blanket Cloth" makes a particularly fine coat. These come in fancy as well as tailored styles. When lined through-out these are sturdy enough for real winter wear.

Obtainable in all sizes from 5 to 14 years. Priced according to size from $7.75 to $10.00.
